Cohasset is a small town and parental denial is rampant. The Cohasset Police are to be strongly commended for even-handedly enforcing the law even when it involves "townies" and teenagers of elected and/or appointed officials. They have a very difficult job and we should support rather than undermine them.

Police under fire

TO THE EDITOR:

Board of Selectmen:

It has come to my attention that the Cohasset Police have come under fire recently about "picking on the kids" of Cohasset. Drinking on public property — Sandy Beach, the gravel pits, the harbor, etc., is illegal at any age unless a permit is given for a function. The legal drinking age is 21, whether you like it or not. Therefore, those under 21 who choose to drink or have any kind of open liquor containers in their possession or automobile are breaking the law. If a minor transports liquor, even as a "designated driver," he or she is breaking the law.

I am sure from what I have gathered in The Mariner and around town, that the same parents and their children who are complaining about the police being "out to get the kids," would be the first in line to criticize the police for not doing their job, or file a lawsuit against the town if the police were not doing their job and stopping these "kids" before trying to drive home and cause a horrific accident. Instead, the police in some ways, are trying to protect the "kids" by taking them into custody, and maybe scaring them, and then calling the parents to get them home safely. The "kids" are given an opportunity to clear their so-called "record" by attending alcohol-awareness classes. These same "kids" attended driver's education classes to learn to drive safely; so presumably, instead of looking at the MADD classes as a problem, they should be considered as an educational deterrent — as they are meant to be.

Parents have to get involved. Parents are always ready to organize the after-prom parties to keep the "kids" safe. What is supposed to happen to the "kids" for the rest of the year? There is no problem — only common courtesy — to ask your child what his or her plans are, even if they are in college, particularly if the parents are paying the bills. Work together with the police and other town groups to protect your most precious possession — your child.

Many people refer to the "good old days." I remember, and not just in Cohasset but other towns, that a child, when picked up by the police for anything, was more afraid of what his or her parents would do than what the police would do. Perhaps we should all work together to keep our children safe at any age.

Sewering Little Harbor — late developments

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

At the last Town meeting in March, the voters approved a sum of money for a capacity study of the Central Sewer Plant to see if it can be expanded to handle the effluent from a sewer system serving homes around Little Harbor. The feasibility for such a plan was confirmed by a study done for the town last year by Stearns and Wheler, environmental engineers. Findings from the study indicate that, depending on a number of variables, to sewer the approximately 285 homes around Little Harbor, about 100,000 gallons of additional capacity would be necessary. The central plant had been given approval by the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) to expand their permit to 300,000 gallons to accommodate the central expansion. This innovative new plant using a proven, but not widely applied technology is not yet operating to full capacity, as all connections have not yet been completed to the newly expanded plant. At the present time, since the plant has never run at near full capacity, its true maximum capacity is not known.

The current study should address the issues relating to increasing of the current plant discharge permit by 100,000 gallons or thereabouts, and should provide the underlying data for the filing of an Environmental Notification Form (ENF) with the Northeast Regional Office of the DEP in Wilmington, Mass., which oversees the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act. (MEPA) The MEPA office will render a decision as to what impact the increased discharge will have on the environment and determine if an Environmental Impact Report (EIR) is required. If an EIR is not required, approval of the expansion of a 300,000 gallon discharge permit to 400,000 gallons should not be a problem.

At the present time, since the plant has never run at near full capacity, its true maximum capacity is not known.

Last month the Town requested a statement of qualifications from potential bidders interested in this capacity assessment. The town has received five qualifications statements from potential bidders. These documents are now being evaluated by representatives of the Selectmen, Sewer Commission, the Board of Health and a representative of the homeowners who will be affected by the sewer system expansion around Little Harbor. These homeowners have formed an organization to ensure that they have a say in the sewer expansion and hopefully ensure that the most economical solution is chosen for the town. A meeting is scheduled for some time in August to discuss the qualifications of the bidders, and evaluate their proposals. Once the bidder is selected, the study should be complete in six months, and the business of planning the sewer system expansion can begin.

More on West Nile Virus

Just a few notes on dead bird sightings and the West Nile Virus(WNV). There have been relatively few cases of the virus reported as a result of the Public health notices which request people to report dead bird sightings. This may be because the system of reporting dead birds has not been completely worked out. The procedure as it stands now is as follows: When a dead bird is found, don't touch the bird, but call the WNV hotline at 1-866-627-7968 and from there the DPH will give the caller instructions and a case number once a case number has been given, the caller should then call the Board of Health office or drop the bird off At the present time there are no facilities for handling dead birds on weekends or holidays.

You can help reduce the spread of culex mosquitoes (which carry the West Nile Virus) by dumping out any standing water from containers, old tires, etc. which you may encounter, since these mosquitoes breed in small pockets of water.

You and the new runway at Logan: myths, realities

LOGAN VIEW

RICHARD GOLDHAMMER

Myth 1: Because air traffic does not fly over me now, I am not affected by jets.

Reality: For arrivals alone, about 30,000 jets approach Logan over the South Shore annually, dropping 110,000 pounds of Volatile Organic Compounds (VOC's) directly onto our communities. VOC's include known carcinogens like benzene. Further, VOC's fan out over an area wider than the jet's flight path. So you and your children breathe in some percentage of VOC's from unburned jet fuel every single day, whether or not you live under a flight path.

The recent cancer study at O'Hare airport found that communities in Chicago as close to O'Hare as South Shore communities are to Logan have two to three times the EPA acceptable risk of exposure to such carcinogens.

Myth 2: Even if the arrivals over the South Shore quadruple with the new runway, it won't affect me.

Reality: With the new runway, jet arrivals alone will increase to about 120,000 annually, dropping 440,000 pounds of VOC's onto South Shore communities. The VOC's will fan out over a larger area because there will be more flight paths to Logan. Chances are you and your family will be affected.

Realty studies project your house equity will drop about 20 percent. So if your home is currently worth $300,000, once the runway is operational it will be worth $240,000.

Myth 3: The noise doesn't bother me now and it won't bother me then.

Reality: Massport is planning to fan out the huge increase of flights (arrivals and departures) over many new flight paths. If you don't have loud flights coming low over you now, you likely will have them once the runway is built.

Sixty-Five decibel noise contours, the point at which individuals experience unlivable conditions due to aircraft noise, will quite possibly extend into South Hingham, perhaps as far as the Hanover line, according to our aviation acoustics expert, Dr. Paul Schomer, the U.S. delegate to the International Organization for Standardization (IOS) Acoustics and Noise committees. Further, the noise from this expansion at Logan will be more constant.

Myth 4: It will not be as bad as a few complainers have been saying.

Reality: It may be worse than what people have been saying, according to national aviation and pollution experts hired by the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Hull and Somerville.

Myth 5: The people in charge will figure something out if it gets too bad.

Reality: Governor Swift, Massport, and the FAA, determined that for Logan to maintain a ticket price monopoly over the Boston area, it had to increase capacity to remain competitive with regional airports. To do this, it needs to build a runway that will increase capacity by directing two-thirds of all flights over the South Shore, according to Massport's documents for the new runway. That's what's been figured out.

Myth 6: If you fly, you will have less delays at Logan and flying will be safer.

Reality: According to public testimony by Dr. Amadeo Odoni, Professor of Aeronautics and Astronautics at MIT and a world expert on delays and airport capacity, delays at Logan will significantly increase if the new runway is built. Furthermore, regional jet pilots, the ones likely to use the runway, are questioning its safety given the already crowded conditions at Logan. Apparently, safety and serving the customer is not as important to Massport as serving the airlines and carrying out political agendas.

Myth 7: There is nothing I can do.

Reality: You can contribute to the South Shore Jet Pollution Charitable Trust by going to the web site www.southshorejetpollution.org. Or you can contact Richard Goldhammer or Don Levi of Hingham, Michael Nuesse of Hull or Linda Wakeman of Cohasset, as well as your town selectmen to find out more.

Building a foundation for community planning

By Liz Harrington
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

— COMMENTARY —

Tonight at 7:30 p.m., the first of four neighborhood forums will take place at the Beechwood Congregational Church. The Growth and Development Committee developed these forums as a way for folks to explore why planning is necessary and why their role in the process is so vital. Residents will come away with basic information about trends and challenges facing Cohasset, and have the opportunity to share their likes, dislikes and vision for the future.

Land use is typically the starting point in a master-planning process.

Just as the neighborhood forums are the first step in developing a vision for Cohasset's future, the following information represents the initial sweep in data collection and analysis that is a major component of a master plan. We hope this information will provide an interesting foundation for our work together creating a vision for Cohasset's future.

Land use is typically the starting point in a master-planning process. It provides the basis for understanding existing and future land use patterns as it takes into account what is allowed under local and state land use regulations including the Zoning Bylaw, Subdivision Rules and Regulations, Wetlands Protection Act and Title V. Understanding how residential, commercial, open space and other land uses hang together and where new development might take place ("buildable land") helps a community determine whether its shared vision is consistent with current land use regulations and decisions. According to the assessor's department, of 3,241 land parcels in town, 2,548 (79 percent) are classified as residential, 369 (11 percent) as commercial or industrial, 190 (6 percent) as personal property, 109 (3 percent) as open or vacant land and 25 (1 percent) as mixed use.

Cohasset's most recent general plan, known as "The Benjamin Report," dates from 1961. At that time, 2,063 of Cohasset's total 6,438 acres of land (33 percent) were categorized as buildable. In 1999, the state's Executive Office of Environmental Affairs completed a land-use analysis of Cohasset that categorized 1,379 (21 percent) of total acres as buildable

Cohasset has nine zoning districts including Residence A, B and C, Light Industry, Technology, Waterfront, Highway and Downtown Business and Official & Open Space. A full 13.5 percent of the town is zoned open or public/municipal space. Approximately 80 percent of town is zoned for residential uses. The remainder (approximately 6.5 percent) is zoned for different business, mixed and industrial uses.

With respect to new development, housing units increased 2.89 percent from 1990 to 2000 (2,724 –2,805) according the US Census, while approximately $22,000,000 in new commercial construction has been permitted since 1996 according to Building Department figures.

According to US Census figures, although the population of Cohasset has increased almost 20 percent in the years since the Benjamin Report, from 5,840 persons in 1960 to 7,261 persons in 2000, it has grown much less rapidly, only 4.23 percent, since 1970 (6,954-7,261). While the population in Cohasset decreased 1.5 percent from 1980 to 1990 (7,174-7,075), it increased 2.6 percent from 1990-2000 (7,075-7,261).

In 1990, 25 percent of the town's population was 19 years of age or under, a decrease from 1980 when this figure was 31 percent. The 2000 Census indicates a reversal of this trend, with 29 percent of the total population 19 and under. Despite the increase in the number of persons age 19 and under, the Median Age increased from 38.6 years in 1990 to 40.9 years in 2000, representing a 5.6 percent increase.

Since 1990, Cohasset has grown at a slower rate than the region. Total population for the South Shore region, including communities from Weymouth to Duxbury, increased 5.4 percent, as opposed to 2.6 percent in Cohasset; median age increased 13 percent versus 5.6 percent for Cohasset. Average household size in the region decreased from 2.8 persons per household in 1990 to 2.7 persons per household in 2000, or a 3.6 percent decrease. During the same period, average household size decreased 1 percent in Cohasset from 2.72 persons per household to 2.69. Total housing units increased 7.6 percent in the region from 1990-2000, while Cohasset increased only 3 percent..

Cohasset continues to be a primarily residential and affluent community with a median family income of $74,310 versus a state average of $44,367 (1990 figures). The tax base is primarily residential with residential tax receipts comprising 93 percent of total. The majority of Cohasset businesses are engaged in retail services and trade (59 percent) as compared to state figures wherein the same category comprises just 36 percent of all businesses.

The information provided above is preliminary in nature and by no means exhaustive. It represents an attempt to inform and stimulate the debate about the future of Cohasset as we embark on a long planning journey. Watch for future newsletters, articles and other communication that will provide the opportunity to explore the trends, challenges and changes happening in our community and the region.

Bradley seeks runway records

Rep. Garrett J. Bradley has written Donna Oliver Perry, the Keeper of Records for Massport, requesting any and all records relating to compensation paid, or to date unpaid, to any person, entity or organization for the purpose of lobbying, public relations and/or advertisement in relation to the proposed additional runway, known as 14/32, at Logan International Airport.

"I believe we have a right to know how much taxpayers are paying to shape public opinion regarding this project here, but more importantly, in Washington where the FAA is reviewing the proposal," said Bradley. "Special interest should not be controlling this debate."

In a letter, Massport Legal Administrator Ann Buckley stated that "Massport is evaluating your request and will assemble the requested documents as soon as they are available."

Bradley hours

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D – Hingham, will hold district office hours Thursday, Aug. 2 at the Hingham Town Hall, Second floor Meeting room, from 1– 2 p.m.. Bay State Politics 101

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Back in the days when Mike Dukakis was the bright of the bright young state reps and Ron Reagan was lea ing a wagon train through Death Valley, I had occasion interview a professor at BC (I think his name w Cherrington) about Massachusetts politics.

The conversation centered around a longtime Bost pol who was then serving time in the slam at the sar time he was representing the folks who elected him. I' not going to name him because he was said to ha friends on Federal Hill in Providence and I'm not one get yelled at by the wise guys.

"How do you explain his getting elected while he's jail?" I asked.

"Easy," said the good professor. "That's when he mee his constituents."

I thought of the professor's comment the other d when I was running down the list of candidates f Congress in the Ninth District to see who I was going vote for in the Sept. 11 Democratic primary.

It is one of the vagaries of Massachusetts politics tha little careful gerrymandering following the 1990 cens left Bill Delahunt, the congressman I have known t longest and best, out of reach of my ballot and paired r with the late Joe Moakley, who I never met in my life.

But I digress . . .

There is an old saying that it takes a bad-actor to mal a girl's heart beat a little faster, which explains why t class beauty often winds up in the arms of the druggie the bank robber. Can it also be said of politics that t slightly soiled candidate is more attractive to the voters

Take the Democratic candidates for Congress in t Ninth District for instance.

Steve Lynch, the senator from South Boston, had r sooner announced than the Flashlight Team (or whatev they call it) from the Herald discovered that he h defaulted on a $26,000 taxpayer-subsidized loan to he him through Boston College Law School in 199 Discovered, he quickly paid up.

"I hope people will honestly forgive my error and mo on," he said.

Then Brian Joyce, the senator from Milton, announce and it was discovered that he had "disrespected" t beloved Moakley by raising funds to run for the vaca seat before it was vacant. "Joe was not pleased," sa Kevin Ryan, the late congressman's chief of staff.

Then Marc Pacheco, the senator from Taunto announced and investigators soon found out that he h spent 64 nights in Boston hotels, paid for out of his car paign funds, when he lived only 39 miles away. He al made 32 trips to Washington for social events and we as far afield as Portugal, Israel, Taiwan and twice Russia.

Then Cheryl Jacques, the senator from Needham — I you have to be a senator to run? — announced and t intrepid Herald probers came up with word that she h given her aide, Jennifer Chrisler, six pay raises fro $25,000 to $48,000 in 4-1/2 years. Jennifer is describ as Cheryl's "domestic partner."

Oh, yes, Max Kennedy was in the lineup for a while; I even bought a new house in the district; until it was fou that he had an arrest record for assaulting a cop in 198 His companion that night 18 years ago was his cous Michael Skakel, who is now charged with murder Greenwich, Conn.

And Joe Timilty, the former senator from Bosto thought about running, too. If in politics, like love, t bad-actor wins, he had the best reason to go on.— a fou month vacation in the slammer for his role in a shady re estate.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Why? Y Not

Youth center would give older teens a cool place to go

Just about every week we are reporting less-than-favorable stories about teens in trouble on the South Shore.

In the past few months alone we have reported on our front pages or police blotter stories involving:

- A drinking party where a host of teens are arrested;
- 17-year-olds are stopped by police at 2 a.m., well beyond what their license allows;
- What some have called "teen pranks" — such as graffiti on seawalls.

The familiar lament heard is that there's not enough to do on the South Shore and idle time tends to get teens in trouble. We also know they are resistant to structured activities once they reach a certain age, such as 15 or 16.

An effort is underway by YMCA officials to prove the cynics wrong. As part of its major expansion project in Hanover, the YMCA — which attracts residents from many parts of the South Shore — will include a new teen center. Officials are hoping the Y Not club will have teens thinking just that: why not go and have some fun.

"For some reason, we start to lose the teens at a certain age," says Natalie Sheard, executive director of the Mill Pond Y in Hanover. "Some are with us from a young age and then they fade out. It's no longer cool or relevant to them."

The Y's efforts to make the place more hip, cool and free flowing is being bolstered by the ever-hip owners of Mount Blue restaurant in Norwell. Owners Patrick and Jayne Bowe of Scituate, parents themselves, were looking for a cause to support as part of their annual summer gala when they had the brainstorm to work in concert to develop the Y Not club.

Early plans call for a cool place where older teens can hang out and feel some independence while parents are assured there is still some structure. Local high school bands will be encouraged to play club coffeehouses and the like. And that's just some of the cool ideas surfacing for the club.

Since the Y draws from many communities on the South Shore, the proposal is also a good alternative in towns lacking the finances or the public support to build a community center or teen center itself.

It all seems like a winning combination, but will require the support of parents and the community at large. As with every new venture, money as well as encouragement are essential ingredients to success.

The annual Mount Blue party this coming Monday is one way to show that support. The soiree generally sells out and features good food, entertainment and conversation for $50 per person (call 781-659-0050 for information about whether there are tickets still available). It is an adults-only gathering, but teens aren't being left out of the fun. Parents can encourage their kids to attend Saturday's outdoor music fest at the Y grounds. For 10 bucks, teens can enjoy nine local bands performing from noon to 6 p.m. There will be T-shirts, food and hats available for sale during the event. (For more details, call 781-829-8585.)

It's a terrific start by Y officials, Mount Blue and many community members who want to see the Y Not club offer an alternative to teens hanging out and letting trouble find them. The Y Not Club isn't going to change things overnight and there will be teens who still shun the idea, but we applaud the efforts to include teens in more structured activities.

We sure want to cover even more positive news about area teens. We continue to have our share of heart-warming stories about teens who help in their communities or work to better the lives of family and friends. But there's always space for more.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Police respond to parents' letter

TO THE EDITOR:

Recently, members of our association read a letter to the editor in the Cohasset Mariner written by the parents of a Cohasset teen. This letter, quite carefully framed an opinion that argues that the members of the Cohasset Police Department are improperly executing their law enforcement duties with respect to the enforcement of underage drinking, possession of alcohol, and the like. The authors go on to ask what can be done to change the relationship between teens and the police.

The membership of the Cohasset Police Association would like to take this opportunity to address the issues that this letter has raised. On face value and absent any other information, the average citizen of Cohasset might read such a letter and actually believe what they have read. The authors of this letter state in part, that the police in Cohasset are not viewed by many people as being there to "protect and to serve". We disagree with that statement. We feel that the vast majority of residents in Cohasset feel exactly that way and we find that the minority of people who do not agree are most often some of the parents of teens, who have been caught breaking the law.

The department has made efforts to bridge the gap between teens and officers. We attempted to run a "citizens police academy" twice last year — not one teen signed up. We had to abandon the idea due to lack of interest. We have repeatedly asked for the DARE program to be part of the curriculum at the schools to no avail. We offered to let teens come on a "ride-along" with police officers. Nothing. The police association offered to have police vs. the high school football team ball game. The fuzzy answer that we received boiled down to a "no". I could go on and on. It's not fair or even accurate to say that the department or the officers are not trying — the simple fact is that we're open to discuss anything, and we have been for years.

The authors also allege that one of their sons has told them that he has been "followed" by police officers on numerous occasions. This accusation fails to recognize the fact that the police officers assigned to patrol do exactly that. Patrol, in this context, means to drive around the area that you are assigned to. In patrolling our assigned area, our job requires us to make observations and look for criminal activity. Incidentally, contrary to popular belief, underage drinking is criminal activity.

Many people may, from time to time, look in their rear view mirror and see a police cruiser. Most law-abiding citizens are not concerned by that and will frequently only experience this once every great while. This is because most people are driving from one point to another. The teenagers that the authors refer to are by their own admission, out driving around. In some cases, they are doing this for an entire evening. Therefore, statistically, it should be no surprise that they stand a much higher chance of encountering a police officer out patrolling, especially when there are several police cars on the road (that look the same) at one time. We have said it before and we will say it again, if you aren't doing anything wrong, you have no reason at all to fear the presence of the police.

What the authors of the letter may not have known is that their teenage son has had encounters with police and was given a break (or two). This information was easily checked at police headquarters. When an officer has dealings with someone, most usually the officer prepares a report, complete with name, date of birth, and nature of the encounter. Although these reports are not mandatory, some officers have found this to be an effective way to document a stop and protect themselves from false claims, as is the case here. It's a little more work for the officer, but well worth it in the end. Parents should realize that their son or daughter isn't going to come and say, "Hey Mom and Dad, the cops took my booze away tonight, but they didn't lock me up". You're only going to hear from them when an arrest has been made. Then sadly, the next steps are to blame the police officer, police department, or the department's policies and procedures. Very often, the officers are the ones that are made out to be the bad guys. Officers are not to blame — we didn't put your son or daughter in a position where they may face arrest — they made a conscious decision to put themselves where trouble is.

This entire story reminds us once again that good intentions on behalf of the police and the exercise of discretion never fails to invite criticism and false allegations. It's no wonder that "breaks" for teens are not as prevalent as they were at one time. Since the authors felt compelled to offer their own advice, we will offer ours in return: It is important to know and check all of the facts before you make an argument — especially in the newspaper.

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Police spend countless hours assisting teenagers survive to adulthood.

It is clear that the criticism of Bob and Mary Ernst as well as Noria Morales are unwarranted. The Ernsts suggest that Cohasset kids have no options other than to drive around town. It is apparent that they do want the police to be babysitters.

Noria Morales' letter if off the chart. It is disturbing to think that she cannot understand that her brother "…was guilty of minor transport." Her last paragraph is totally nonsensical, to wit: "…a society whose efforts to repress such vices as drinking, drugs and sex have perversely retarded effects…"

Cohasset is a small town and parental denial is rampant. The Cohasset Police are to be strongly commended for even-handedly enforcing the law even when it involves "townies" and teenagers of elected and/or appointed officials. They have a very difficult job and we should support rather than undermine them.

Police under fire

TO THE EDITOR:

Board of Selectmen:

It has come to my attention that the Cohasset Police have come under fire recently about "picking on the kids" of Cohasset. Drinking on public property — Sandy Beach, the gravel pits, the harbor, etc., is illegal at any age unless a permit is given for a function. The legal drinking age is 21, whether you like it or not. Therefore, those under 21 who choose to drink or have any kind of open liquor containers in their possession or automobile are breaking the law. If a minor transports liquor, even as a "designated driver," he or she is breaking the law.

I am sure from what I have gathered in The Mariner and around town, that the same parents and their children who are complaining about the police being "out to get the kids," would be the first in line to criticize the police for not doing their job, or file a lawsuit against the town if the police were not doing their job and stopping these "kids" before trying to drive home and cause a horrific accident. Instead, the police in some ways, are trying to protect the "kids" by taking them into custody, and maybe scaring them, and then calling the parents to get them home safely. The "kids" are given an opportunity to clear their so-called "record" by attending alcohol-awareness classes. These same "kids" attended driver's education classes to learn to drive safely; so presumably, instead of looking at the MADD classes as a problem, they should be considered as an educational deterrent — as they are meant to be.

Parents have to get involved. Parents are always ready to organize the after-prom parties to keep the "kids" safe. What is supposed to happen to the "kids" for the rest of the year? There is no problem — only common courtesy — to ask your child what his or her plans are, even if they are in college, particularly if the parents are paying the bills. Work together with the police and other town groups to protect your most precious possession — your child.

Many people refer to the "good old days." I remember, and not just in Cohasset but other towns, that a child, when picked up by the police for anything, was more afraid of what his or her parents would do than what the police would do. Perhaps we should all work together to keep our children safe at any age.

Sewering Little Harbor — late developments

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

At the last Town meeting in March, the voters approved a sum of money for a capacity study of the Central Sewer Plant to see if it can be expanded to handle the effluent from a sewer system serving homes around Little Harbor. The feasibility for such a plan was confirmed by a study done for the town last year by Stearns and Wheler, environmental engineers. Findings from the study indicate that, depending on a number of variables, to sewer the approximately 285 homes around Little Harbor, about 100,000 gallons of additional capacity would be necessary. The central plant had been given approval by the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) to expand their permit to 300,000 gallons to accommodate the central expansion. This innovative new plant using a proven, but not widely applied technology is not yet operating to full capacity, as all connections have not yet been completed to the newly expanded plant. At the present time, since the plant has never run at near full capacity, its true maximum capacity is not known.

The current study should address the issues relating to increasing of the current plant discharge permit by 100,000 gallons or thereabouts, and should provide the underlying data for the filing of an Environmental Notification Form (ENF) with the Northeast Regional Office of the DEP in Wilmington, Mass., which oversees the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act. (MEPA) The MEPA office will render a decision as to what impact the increased discharge will have on the environment and determine if an Environmental Impact Report (EIR) is required. If an EIR is not required, approval of the expansion of a 300,000 gallon discharge permit to 400,000 gallons should not be a problem.

At the present time, since the plant has never run at near full capacity, its true maximum capacity is not known.

Last month the Town requested a statement of qualifications from potential bidders interested in this capacity assessment. The town has received five qualifications statements from potential bidders. These documents are now being evaluated by representatives of the Selectmen, Sewer Commission, the Board of Health and a representative of the homeowners who will be affected by the sewer system expansion around Little Harbor. These homeowners have formed an organization to ensure that they have a say in the sewer expansion and hopefully ensure that the most economical solution is chosen for the town. A meeting is scheduled for some time in August to discuss the qualifications of the bidders, and evaluate their proposals. Once the bidder is selected, the study should be complete in six months, and the business of planning the sewer system expansion can begin.

More on West Nile Virus

Just a few notes on dead bird sightings and the West Nile Virus(WNV). There have been relatively few cases of the virus reported as a result of the Public health notices which request people to report dead bird sightings. This may be because the system of reporting dead birds has not been completely worked out. The procedure as it stands now is as follows: When a dead bird is found, don't touch the bird, but call the WNV hotline at 1-866-627-7968 and from there the DPH will give the caller instructions and a case number once a case number has been given, the caller should then call the Board of Health office or drop the bird off At the present time there are no facilities for handling dead birds on weekends or holidays.

You can help reduce the spread of culex mosquitoes (which carry the West Nile Virus) by dumping out any standing water from containers, old tires, etc. which you may encounter, since these mosquitoes breed in small pockets of water.

You and the new runway at Logan: myths, realities

LOGAN VIEW

RICHARD GOLDHAMMER

Myth 1: Because air traffic does not fly over me now, I am not affected by jets.

Reality: For arrivals alone, about 30,000 jets approach Logan over the South Shore annually, dropping 110,000 pounds of Volatile Organic Compounds (VOC's) directly onto our communities. VOC's include known carcinogens like benzene. Further, VOC's fan out over an area wider than the jet's flight path. So you and your children breathe in some percentage of VOC's from unburned jet fuel every single day, whether or not you live under a flight path.

The recent cancer study at O'Hare airport found that communities in Chicago as close to O'Hare as South Shore communities are to Logan have two to three times the EPA acceptable risk of exposure to such carcinogens.

Myth 2: Even if the arrivals over the South Shore quadruple with the new runway, it won't affect me.

Reality: With the new runway, jet arrivals alone will increase to about 120,000 annually, dropping 440,000 pounds of VOC's onto South Shore communities. The VOC's will fan out over a larger area because there will be more flight paths to Logan. Chances are you and your family will be affected.

Realty studies project your house equity will drop about 20 percent. So if your home is currently worth $300,000, once the runway is operational it will be worth $240,000.

Myth 3: The noise doesn't bother me now and it won't bother me then.

Reality: Massport is planning to fan out the huge increase of flights (arrivals and departures) over many new flight paths. If you don't have loud flights coming low over you now, you likely will have them once the runway is built.

Sixty-Five decibel noise contours, the point at which individuals experience unlivable conditions due to aircraft noise, will quite possibly extend into South Hingham, perhaps as far as the Hanover line, according to our aviation acoustics expert, Dr. Paul Schomer, the U.S. delegate to the International Organization for Standardization (IOS) Acoustics and Noise committees. Further, the noise from this expansion at Logan will be more constant.

Myth 4: It will not be as bad as a few complainers have been saying.

Reality: It may be worse than what people have been saying, according to national aviation and pollution experts hired by the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Hull and Somerville.

Myth 5: The people in charge will figure something out if it gets too bad.

Reality: Governor Swift, Massport, and the FAA, determined that for Logan to maintain a ticket price monopoly over the Boston area, it had to increase capacity to remain competitive with regional airports. To do this, it needs to build a runway that will increase capacity by directing two-thirds of all flights over the South Shore, according to Massport's documents for the new runway. That's what's been figured out.

Myth 6: If you fly, you will have less delays at Logan and flying will be safer.

Reality: According to public testimony by Dr. Amadeo Odoni, Professor of Aeronautics and Astronautics at MIT and a world expert on delays and airport capacity, delays at Logan will significantly increase if the new runway is built. Furthermore, regional jet pilots, the ones likely to use the runway, are questioning its safety given the already crowded conditions at Logan. Apparently, safety and serving the customer is not as important to Massport as serving the airlines and carrying out political agendas.

Myth 7: There is nothing I can do.

Reality: You can contribute to the South Shore Jet Pollution Charitable Trust by going to the web site www.southshorejetpollution.org. Or you can contact Richard Goldhammer or Don Levi of Hingham, Michael Nuesse of Hull or Linda Wakeman of Cohasset, as well as your town selectmen to find out more.

Building a foundation for community planning

— COMMENTARY —

By Liz Harrington
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Tonight at 7:30 p.m., the first of four neighborhood forums will take place at the Beechwood Congregational Church. The Growth and Development Committee developed these forums as a way for folks to explore why planning is necessary and why their role in the process is so vital. Residents will come away with basic information about trends and challenges facing Cohasset, and have the opportunity to share their likes, dislikes and vision for the future.

Land use is typically the starting point in a master-planning process.

Just as the neighborhood forums are the first step in developing a vision for Cohasset's future, the following information represents the initial sweep in data collection and analysis that is a major component of a master plan. We hope this information will provide an interesting foundation for our work together creating a vision for Cohasset's future.

Land use is typically the starting point in a master-planning process. It provides the basis for understanding existing and future land use patterns as it takes into account what is allowed under local and state land use regulations including the Zoning Bylaw, Subdivision Rules and Regulations, Wetlands Protection Act and Title V. Understanding how residential, commercial, open space and other land uses hang together and where new development might take place ("buildable land") helps a community determine whether its shared vision is consistent with current land use regulations and decisions. According to the assessor's department, of 3,241 land parcels in town, 2,548 (79 percent) are classified as residential, 369 (11 percent) as commercial or industrial, 190 (6 percent) as personal property, 109 (3 percent) as open or vacant land and 25 (1 percent) as mixed use.

Cohasset's most recent general plan, known as "The Benjamin Report," dates from 1961. At that time, 2,063 of Cohasset's total 6,438 acres of land (33 percent) were categorized as buildable. In 1999, the state's Executive Office of Environmental Affairs completed a land-use analysis of Cohasset that categorized 1,379 (21 percent) of total acres as buildable

Cohasset has nine zoning districts including Residence A, B and C, Light Industry, Technology, Waterfront, Highway and Downtown Business and Official & Open Space. A full 13.5 percent of the town is zoned open or public/municipal space. Approximately 80 percent of town is zoned for residential uses. The remainder (approximately 6.5 percent) is zoned for different business, mixed and industrial uses.

With respect to new development, housing units increased 2.89 percent from 1990 to 2000 (2,724 –2,805) according the US Census, while approximately $22,000,000 in new commercial construction has been permitted since 1996 according to Building Department figures.

According to US Census figures, although the population of Cohasset has increased almost 20 percent in the years since the Benjamin Report, from 5,840 persons in 1960 to 7,261 persons in 2000, it has grown much less rapidly, only 4.23 percent, since 1970 (6,954-7,261). While the population in Cohasset decreased 1.5 percent from 1980 to 1990 (7,174-7,075), it increased 2.6 percent from 1990-2000 (7,075-7,261).

In 1990, 25 percent of the town's population was 19 years of age or under, a decrease from 1980 when this figure was 31 percent. The 2000 Census indicates a reversal of this trend, with 29 percent of the total population 19 and under. Despite the increase in the number of persons age 19 and under, the Median Age increased from 38.6 years in 1990 to 40.9 years in 2000, representing a 5.6 percent increase.

Since 1990, Cohasset has grown at a slower rate than the region. Total population for the South Shore region, including communities from Weymouth to Duxbury, increased 5.4 percent, as opposed to 2.6 percent in Cohasset; median age increased 13 percent versus 5.6 percent for Cohasset. Average household size in the region decreased from 2.8 persons per household in 1990 to 2.7 persons per household in 2000, or a 3.6 percent decrease. During the same period, average household size decreased 1 percent in Cohasset from 2.72 persons per household to 2.69. Total housing units increased 7.6 percent in the region from 1990-2000, while Cohasset increased only 3 percent..

Cohasset continues to be a primarily residential and affluent community with a median family income of $74,310 versus a state average of $44,367 (1990 figures). The tax base is primarily residential with residential tax receipts comprising 93 percent of total. The majority of Cohasset businesses are engaged in retail services and trade (59 percent) as compared to state figures wherein the same category comprises just 36 percent of all businesses.

The information provided above is preliminary in nature and by no means exhaustive. It represents an attempt to inform and stimulate the debate about the future of Cohasset as we embark on a long planning journey. Watch for future newsletters, articles and other communication that will provide the opportunity to explore the trends, challenges and changes happening in our community and the region.

Bradley seeks runway records

Rep. Garrett J. Bradley has written Donna Oliver Perry, the Keeper of Records for Massport, requesting any and all records relating to compensation paid, or to date unpaid, to any person, entity or organization for the purpose of lobbying, public relations and/or advertisement in relation to the proposed additional runway, known as 14/32, at Logan International Airport.

"I believe we have a right to know how much taxpayers are paying to shape public opinion regarding this project here, but more importantly, in Washington where the FAA is reviewing the proposal," said Bradley. "Special interest should not be controlling this debate."

In a letter, Massport Legal Administrator Ann Buckley stated that "Massport is evaluating your request and will assemble the requested documents as soon as they are available."

Bradley hours

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D – Hingham, will hold district office hours Thursday, Aug. 2 at the Hingham Town Hall, Second floor Meeting room, from 1– 2 p.m.. Bay State Politics 101

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Back in the days when Mike Dukakis was the bright of the bright young state reps and Ron Reagan was lea ing a wagon train through Death Valley, I had occasion interview a professor at BC (I think his name w Cherrington) about Massachusetts politics.

The conversation centered around a longtime Bost pol who was then serving time in the slam at the sar time he was representing the folks who elected him. I' not going to name him because he was said to ha friends on Federal Hill in Providence and I'm not one get yelled at by the wise guys.

"How do you explain his getting elected while he's jail?" I asked.

"Easy," said the good professor. "That's when he mee his constituents."

I thought of the professor's comment the other d when I was running down the list of candidates f Congress in the Ninth District to see who I was going vote for in the Sept. 11 Democratic primary.

It is one of the vagaries of Massachusetts politics that little careful gerrymandering following the 1990 cens left Bill Delahunt, the congressman I have known t longest and best, out of reach of my ballot and paired n with the late Joe Moakley, who I never met in my life.

But I digress . . .

There is an old saying that it takes a bad-actor to mal a girl's heart beat a little faster, which explains why t class beauty often winds up in the arms of the druggie the bank robber. Can it also be said of politics that t slightly soiled candidate is more attractive to the voters

Take the Democratic candidates for Congress in t Ninth District for instance.

Steve Lynch, the senator from South Boston, had r sooner announced than the Flashlight Team (or whatev they call it) from the Herald discovered that he h defaulted on a $26,000 taxpayer-subsidized loan to he him through Boston College Law School in 199 Discovered, he quickly paid up.

"I hope people will honestly forgive my error and mo on," he said.

Then Brian Joyce, the senator from Milton, announc and it was discovered that he had "disrespected" t beloved Moakley by raising funds to run for the vaca seat before it was vacant. "Joe was not pleased," sa Kevin Ryan, the late congressman's chief of staff.

Then Marc Pacheco, the senator from Taunto announced and investigators soon found out that he h spent 64 nights in Boston hotels, paid for out of his car paign funds, when he lived only 39 miles away. He al made 32 trips to Washington for social events and we as far afield as Portugal, Israel, Taiwan and twice Russia.

Then Cheryl Jacques, the senator from Needham — I you have to be a senator to run? — announced and t intrepid Herald probers came up with word that she h given her aide, Jennifer Chrisler, six pay raises fro $25,000 to $48,000 in 4-1/2 years. Jennifer is describ as Cheryl's "domestic partner."

Oh, yes, Max Kennedy was in the lineup for a while; h even bought a new house in the district; until it was fou that he had an arrest record for assaulting a cop in 198 His companion that night 18 years ago was his cousi Michael Skakel, who is now charged with murder Greenwich, Conn.

And Joe Timilty, the former senator from Bosto thought about running, too. If in politics, like love, t bad-actor wins, he had the best reason to go on.— a fou month vacation in the slammer for his role in a shady re estate.

Cohasset voters know Prop. 2-1/2 all too well

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Town Manager Mark Haddad was in a senior in high school when the statewide campaign to pass Prop. 2-1/2 took root.

"I can remember the teachers screaming about it and my father campaigning for it because he thought property taxes were out of control," he recalled. Haddad had no way of knowing at the time that he would choose a career in which the legislation would have an effect on nearly all the financial matters he deals with.

Cohasset provides Haddad, who wrote his master's thesis on the effect of Prop. 2-1/2 on local government, with the opportunity to continually hone his skills on the workings of the 20-year-old law. The town of 7,000 holds override and debt exclusion votes on a regular basis, with a total of at least 53 ballot questions put before the voters over the past two decades. Twenty-six of those passed muster.

But while the law may seem routine today, the very prospect of limiting property taxes shook the seaside town like an earthquake 20 years ago. According to a draft of the 1980s chapter of the Third Volume of Cohasset History, town officials, who feared drastic cuts, were unanimously opposed to the law. But like their counterparts across the state, Cohasset taxpayers didn't listen, and headed to the polls in droves. Along with presidential candidate Reagan and his running mate Bush, Cohasset backed Prop. 2-1/2 by a wide margin.

The aftershocks were severe. "Many department heads were asked to cut their budgets by 15 percent," writes Jacqueline M. Dormitzer, author of the new volume of town history. Town officials turned off streetlights, closed the library on Wednesdays, cut personnel and closed outlying fire stations. The school department was hit the hardest and had to eliminate 31-1/2 positions.

Under the new law, the school department also lost its financial autonomy and would have to seek town meeting approval for its budget.

Martha Gjesteby was on the School Committee at the time and voted with the others to oppose Prop. 2-1/2. But today, she sees the law as a good thing.

"We've recouped from those early days," she said. "It curbed school spending, but as it turned out, it was nice to have the budget voted at Town Meeting because people asked more questions."

Alex Koines of Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers, a grassroots group that keeps an eye on taxes, says Prop. 2-1/2 has helped take some of the burden off the homeowner because it forced the state to give more money back to communities.

"Without it there was way too much reliance on property taxes, which are the most regressive taxes we have," Koines said.

He doesn't think the law and resulting overrides have been divisive for the town.

"Without 2-1/2, we wouldn't have the discussion," he said. "Now people are involved. It gives them the incentive to participate in the democratic process."

But for Haddad — who has been on the job in Cohasset for nearly five years — the realities of living within a 2-1/2 limit while trying to run a town with expenses rising higher than that can be taxing.

"I think the concept is necessary, it makes you live on a budget," he said. "But in a town that is 93 percent residential, it is too restrictive and we're forced to go back and ask for overrides."

Haddad said he'd like to see the state contribute more to towns like Cohasset.

"People think all of Cohasset is wealthy and can afford high taxes, but they're wrong," he said. "There are a lot, who are having a hard time here making ends meet."

Haddad said if he had his druthers, he'd like to see "Prop. 4" — that way the town would not have to go back to the voters time and time again.

Tax-cap law makes the history books

egislation limits the annual increase n the local tax levy to 2-1/2 percent with an allowance for new construction. If their municipality needs nore money than allowed, voters — n a simple majority at the ballot box can approve an override of the 2-1/2 limit. [To grasp how levy limits, evy ceilings, new growth and overides are calculated see accompanying text and illustrations].

"Taxachusetts"

To understand the forces behind he 1980 citizens' tax uprising, the lock must be turned back some 25 ears. In the mid-to-late '70s, Massachusetts was a different place. Commonly derided as "Taxachusetts," the state had a total er capita tax burden that was third ighest in the nation — 80 percent bove the national average. In those lays, homeowners were at the nercy of their municipality that set he tax rate to cover expenses, and hen expected them to ante up.

Jack Conway, founder of Jack Conway Real Estate, remembers it ll too well. Conway was state chairman of The Citizens for a Massachusetts Tax Cap, a predecesor of Citizens for Limited Taxation.

"In some of our towns, the real state tax bill would be up to 5 percent of the value of the property," Conway recalled, meaning a house valued at $20,000, at the time, could have a tax bill of $1,000. [Today, that would translate into a $200,000 house with a tax bill of $10,000].

Proponents of the initiative recalled the combination of high property taxes and state taxes was crippling the local economy.

"The state was in horrible shape because we were so excessively overtaxed," Conway said. "We couldn't get industry to even consider Massachusetts and industries here were relocating to places like North and South Carolina or Arizona."

Yet as "Prop.2-1/2" comes of age in its 21st year, some question the price towns have paid. Over the years, nary a community has escaped a divisive override fight. Battles over the Prop. 2-1/2 override's "cousin," dubbed debt exclusions, — which allow towns to exempt the debt service for large projects, such as new schools, from the tax cap limit — have torn towns apart. On Election Day, there is often a familiar refrain. Parents of schoolchildren stand on one side of the street with signs saying, "Vote yes, Save our Schools" while often senior citizens stand on the other saying, "Vote No," so they won't be priced out of town.

Jim St. George, director of the Tax Equity Alliance of Massachusetts known as TEAM, says Prop. 2-1/2 is an imperfect law that resulted from government's lack of response to the people.

"Prop. 2-1/2 has less to do with anti-tax backlash than it has to do with the failure of the legislative process in the late 1970s," he says. "Everyone in the state knew the problem had to be addressed, our property taxes were among the highest in the country.

"But if the Legislature had been able to respond to public demand, there wouldn't have been a need for Prop. 2-1/2."

St. George, who says municipalities were shielded from 2-1/2's true impact during the boom years of the '90s because of increases in state aid, said there's an inherent unfairness in the law. The higher income communities have a greater capacity to raise their taxes — resulting in better services and better schools in those towns.

Cohasset, for example, has successfully overridden Prop. 2-1/2 some 26 times where Weymouth has not had a single override. However, it's important to note that Cohasset has one-sixth the population of Weymouth and the lion's share of the town budget is dependent on homeowners because the commercial tax base there is so small.

Dilapidated buildings

In a recent newspaper opinion piece, Laurie Stillman, a town meeting member in Milton, sounded a rallying call for the Statehouse to change the law, blaming Prop. 2-1/2 for dilapidated schools and crumbling infrastructure. She said the law deprives communities of enough money to provide essential services, pitting interest groups against one another.

"This infighting is tearing at our community fabric," she stated.

But despite divisive override campaigns and the painful realities of living within a 2-1/2 limit because union raises and inflation can run at 3 percent annually or more, there are no indications of a groundswell of support to change the law.

Even St. George of TEAM, whose mission is to make the budget and tax system in the state responsive to the needs of the people, doesn't see any chipping away at 2-1/2.

"It's not a total failure," he said about whether the law is working. "I'd give it an overall 'C.'

"But we have it — and our challenge is finding ways to live with that system."

Anderson of Citizens for Limited Taxation says Prop. 2-1/2 has kept its promise of keeping real estate taxes under control and forcing the state to provide more revenue sharing to cities and towns. Although the overall Massachusetts tax burden is still high it is no longer the butt of all jokes. Without 1980's ballot vote for 2-1/2, the state would have either turned into the "Appalachia of New England," Anderson says, or there would have been a taxpayer revolt a few years later to end all taxpayer revolts. A recent report, commissioned by CLT, examines Prop. 2-1/2's history and says the property tax levy has risen an average of 18 percent [without overrides] over the 20 years when adjusted for inflation.

She thinks 2-1/2 is here to stay, and says the power the law gives the voters goes to the heart of a democracy.

"When a community wants more money, it has to ask the people," she said. "It's a pure form of democracy and once you get used to it, it would be hard to take it away."

Special Report

Understanding Proposition 2-1/2

Property tax levy: The amount a community can raise through property taxes.

Levy controls: Proposition 2-1/2 established two types of levy controls:

- A community cannot levy more than 2-1/2 percent of its full and fair cash value, known as its levy ceiling.
- A community's levy is also constrained so it can only increase a certain amount from year to year, known as its levy limit.

Override: Allows a community to assess taxes in excess of the automatic 2-1/2 percent annual increase through a simple majority ballot vote, as long as the community is below its levy ceiling. An override allows a community to permanently increase its levy limit.

Debt exclusion: Allows a community to assess taxes in excess of its levy limit or levy ceiling for the payment of debt service costs through a 2/3 vote at town meeting and a majority ballot vote. A debt exclusion only allows a temporary tax increase over a community's levy limit. Tax increase goes away when the debt is paid off.

Capital outlay exclusion: Allows a community to raise money in excess of its levy limit for certain capital projects only for the year the project is undertaken. Ballot vote required. A capital outlay exclusion is a temporary tax increase.

New growth: Allows a community to increase its levy limit annually by an amount based on the increased value of new development and other growth that is not the result of revaluation. No ballot vote required. New growth is calculated by multiplying the increase in the assessed valuation of qualifying property by the prior year's tax rate.

Excess levy capacity: Difference between the levy and the levy limit that occurs when a community chooses to set its levy at any amount below its levy limit. This is an additional amount a community could, but chooses not to, levy. Prop. 2-1/2 limits increases from year to year in the levy limit, not the levy. Before the tax rate is set, the full levy limit is available to the community, regardless of how much the community levied in previous years. It is within the law under Prop. 2-1/2 for a community to have excess levy capacity in one year and, in the following year, to levy right up to the full amount of its new levy limit.

Underride: Allows a community to reduce its levy limit by passing an underride, resulting in a permanent tax decrease in the levy limit because it reduces the base upon which levy limits are calculated for future years. Requires a ballot vote. May be placed on the ballot by selectmen or the people using a local initiative petition procedure, if one is provided by law.

How is a Levy Limit Increased?

The levy limit is increased from year to year as long as it remains below the levy ceiling. Permanent increases in the levy limit result from the following:

Automatic 2.5% Increase. Each year, a community's levy limit automatically increases by 2.5% over the previous year's levy limit. This does not require any action on the part of local officials; the Department of Revenue calculates this increase automatically.

New Growth. A community is able to increase its levy limit each year to reflect new growth in the tax base. Assessors are required to submit information on growth in the tax base for approval by the Department of Revenue as part of the tax rate setting process. New growth is discussed in Section II.

Overrides. A community can permanently increase its levy limit by successfully voting an override. The amount of the override becomes a permanent part of the levy limit base.

How is a Levy Limit Calculated?

Since 1981, when Proposition 2½ went into effect, a levy limit for each community has been calculated annually by the Department of Revenue. It is important to note that a community's levy limit is based on the previous year's levy limit and not on the previous year's actual levy.

Each step in the example below is explained in more detail in other sections of this primer. A levy limit is calculated by:

Taking the previous year's levy limit and increasing it by 2.5%:

A. FY94 Levy Limit		$1,000,000
B. (A) x 2.5%	+	$25,000

Adding to the levy limit amounts of certified new growth added to the community's property tax base:

C. FY95 New Growth	+	$15,000

Adding to the levy limit amounts authorized by override votes:

D. FY95 Override	+	$100,000
E. FY95 Subtotal (A+B+C+D)	=	$1,140,000

Comparing the FY95 levy limit to the FY95 levy ceiling and applying the lesser number (compare E and F):

F. FY95 Levy Ceiling		$2,500,000

$1,140,000
Applicable FY95 Levy Limit
(Lesser of E and F)

This community's levy limit, the maximum amount in real and personal property taxes it can levy, is $1,140,000 for FY95. How much of this amount the community actually wants to use — that is, the amount of the levy — is up to the discretion of local officials. The community can levy up to or at any level below the entire levy limit amount, regardless of what its levy was in the previous year.

How is a Levy Ceiling Calculated?

The levy ceiling is determined by calculating 2.5% of the total full and fair cash value of taxable real and personal property in the community:

Full and Fair Cash Value x 2.5% = LEVY CEILING
Full and Fair Cash Value = $100,000,000
$100,000,000 x 2.5% = $2,500,000

In this example, the levy ceiling is $2,500,000.

Figure 1

In summary, the levy limit can increase from year to year in these ways: automatic 2.5% increase, new growth and overrides. Once the levy limit is increased in any of these ways, the increased levy limit amount becomes the base upon which levy limits are calculated for future years. See figure 3.

A look at the names behind the streets

Sohier Street is named after William Davies Sohier, a summer resident.

Wadsworth, a Nichols descendant. The original family lived near Straits Pond, but the family soon branched out along what is now Jerusalem Road, building small farms.

Aaron Nichols Jr. built an "old salt box farmhouse" near what is now Bow Street. Eventually a separate road developed off his property to Jerusalem Road, hence the name "Nichols Road."

Gammons Road

It was named after Charles Gammons, a Highland Avenue resident from the early 1900's.

"Gammons owned a lot of property including Rice Island and most of Cooper Island in Little Harbor," said Wadsworth.

Gammons built a little stone camp and private road out to Rice Island, which Wadsworth remembers visiting as a youngster.

In the period shortly before and after World War II, the property was split into lots, and over time, more and more houses were built along "Gammons's road."

Jerusalem Road

The small gathering of stores and businesses in the northwest end of Cohasset is now known as West Corner. How does that tie into the background of Jerusalem Road? Because prior to being known as West Corner, it was known as Jerusalem.

"How it got to have that name, I have no idea," Wadsworth said. "But the road leading out to it was called the 'Road to Jerusalem.'"

So how did West Corner become known as West Corner?

"It's not because it's in the western corner of the town," Wadsworth said. "It was named after James West, a prominent land and store owner."

Doane Street

One of the most populous streets in Beechwood was actually named after a family who probably never lived there.

Elisha Doane came from a prominent Cape Cod family, among one of the wealthiest families in New England, said Wadsworth. He settled in Cohasset and was not only a socially prominent figure in town, but also was a large land owner, and ran ships and salt works. He lived at 3 North Main St., now the South Shore Community Center, and was responsible for adding the building's third floor. His son, Squire James Cutler Doane followed in his footsteps, at one time owning Government Island before it was bought by the federal government.

"But why that street was named for that family, I don't know," said Wadsworth.

Some of the reasons for other street names have simple explanations. King Street as it was originally laid out — a straight shot from North Main Street to Lily Pond — was supposed to be main road in town.

"And you name your main road after your king," said Wadsworth.

Chief Justice Cushing was one of the first chief justices of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, and a Scituate resident. Beechwood Street was the "Road to the Beech Woods," where there was apparently an abundance of beech trees at one time. Edward Ripley built a house off Sohier Street, on what would now be the northeast of the intersection, in the late 1800's. James Lane was named for Thomas James, the builder of a small farmhouse in 1704, and what is now known as the Red Lion Inn.

Other tidbits about the town's roads, not necessarily pertaining their names, but interesting nonetheless include that North and South Main Street, one of the first state-funded highways built, was originally Route 3A. Route 3A as we now know it, wasn't built until the 1930's. North Main Street actually used to continue up Cedar Street and down to Hull Street, instead of veering off and meeting up with Route 228 farther south.

The reason King Street originally stopped at North Main Street was that if it had kept going, it would have ended up in the middle of a swamp leading to Rattlesnake Run. In the late 1800's, the town put a bend in the road, continued it through the woods down to the ocean and called it Forest Avenue.

ZBA debating roof expansion on Highland Avenue

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Zoning Board of Appeals is debating whether to allow an expansion of a Cohasset Common Historic District house at 63 Highland Ave.

The project, which won approval from the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission in May, would raise the roof of the house 2-1/2 feet, and extend the second floor 7-1/2 feet down Beach Street. The house, owned by Charles Furtado, is on the corner of Highland Avenue and Beach Street.

The house, known as the Capt. Samuel Bates Jr. House, has had several additions since it was originally built in 1793, including a rear porch and garage. In one spot, the proposed expansion of the second floor and roof would result in a nearly 18-foot height increase from what is currently there.

Town bylaw prohibits a house in close proximity of a road from having a roof built higher than 15 feet. Furtado's home is 11 feet from Beach Street, and five feet from Highland Avenue at one point, and already has a roof in excess of 15 feet. As a result, Furtado asked the ZBA last week for a variance allowing him to expand the existing non-conforming roof.

The original house won't be expanded, but the project would expand the subsequent additions. The result would be the addition of a bathroom and reduction of a bedroom inside the original box. Furtado said the bathroom had years ago been split to make room for a bedroom, and that he would be restoring the additional floor plan.

The appeals board generally liked the plan, but debated whether the expansion would be a substantial increase in the "mass" of the house. One of the criteria for approving the expansion of an existing non-conforming use is whether it would be detrimental to the neighborhood.

"The question is, is it substantially more detrimental, sort of detrimental or not at all?"
— ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick

"The question is, is it substantially more detrimental, sort of detrimental or not at all," ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick asked the board.

Neighbor Carolyn Horn said she was concerned that the expansion would have a negative impact on the house as viewed by passersby and from the common.

Board member Jane Goedecke said even though no one "owns" the view from Beach Street of Little Harbor, that "when we live near the water, the view is a major asset."

The expansion is part of a major exterior renovation of the house, which recently had its clapboards replaced and painted. Furtado also plans to expand an existing three-season room into a year-round room, and round off the framing around the garage doors to make it more resemble a carriage house.

The ZBA closed the public hearing and will deliberate the issue at its next meeting on Aug. 6.

Village upgrade gets yellow light what's in the mitigation agreement.

The board also held off on the task force's request to build a sample section of sidewalk in front of Cards & Shards. The task force voted to recommend building a 60-foot section of brick sidewalk at a cost of $9,000 split between the CRC and the town. But Rizzo said the CRC would pick up the entire cost if the town allowed them to build three different samples 20-feet wide each instead.

Callahan opposed the task force's recommendation for brick sidewalk throughout the village saying brick sidewalks rarely settles properly. He also suggested presenting the village renovation plan to the Growth and Development Committee to be included in the upcoming master plan.

O'Brien said the task force will go back and try to provide the board with the information it wants. He also said despite three years of meetings, he was still optimistic that the project will eventually happen

"I'm not really discouraged, I'm kind of used to them looking for more," he said. "That seems to be the case every time we go in, so I wasn't surprised by it at all."

He said the task force plans to work with Rizzo to come up with cost estimates broken down into phases, and sidewalk materials.

O'Brien also though the board raised a good point in the need for an implementation plan for the project.

Overall though, he thought it encouraging that the board seemed to support the basic vision of the plan.

"They generally seemed to like the concepts," he said.

Legislators: Let towns control affordable housing

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

Reforms of the Affordable Housing Law passed by the state House of Representatives and to be debated by the Senate will aim to put the development of affordable housing under local control, while creating tools and incentives to encouraging affordable housing that adds to community life.

"This is a strong reform of the 40B process, a whole package of reforms sending the law back in the direction of local control," said state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth.

Chapter 40B allows developers to bypass local zoning ordinances in communities with less than 10 percent affordable housing, as long as 25 percent of the development's units will qualify as affordable under the state's definition.

Examples of the misuse of Chapter 40B are occurring all over the state, according to Hedlund.

In Hingham, a lot zoned for one single family home now has 25 townhouses, due to a developer who received a permit under Chapter 40B, Hedlund said.

In Weymouth, the AvalonBay complex was approved under the cloud of the developer reapplying under Chapter 40B.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, stressed that the House reforms are meant to make the law work better.

"We're trying to remove the element of using Chapter 40B as a threat. Suburban communities aren't against affordable housing, but the statute isn't being used as the original bill was intended," Bradley said.

There is bipartisan support for reform, and the Senate version will probably be pretty close to the version approved by the House, according to Hedlund.

"A lot of senators have filed bills that would change the whole process. This is one of those rare exceptions that members will vote with their districts rather than their leadership, and rightfully so," Hedlund said.

Hedlund is waiting for the Senate version to emerge from the Ways and Means Committee for discussion, expected to happen around Labor Day.

"I am disappointed that the Senate is not going to act upon this until the fall. I would have liked to get this on the floor for debate as soon as possible," Hedlund said.

One of the controversial provisions of the House version, not included in the version favored by the Swift administration, is an amendment that would allow in-law apartments, federally-subsidized Section 8 housing, and mobile homes to count toward a town's "affordable housing" stock. Under state law, each community is mandated to have 10 percent of its dwelling units as affordable.

This would give a more accurate picture of the quantity of affordable housing in a community, proponents said, but would put communities such as Weymouth over the 10 percent threshold.

However, Weymouth has done more than its share in providing affordable housing, Hedlund said.

"Weymouth is affordable because it does not have 'snob zoning' in place.' Weymouth also has one of the highest percentages of group homes in the area. The town also does a lot for senior housing. How much more can Weymouth shoulder?" Hedlund asked.

Hedlund thinks group homes should be counted as affordable housing. However, he does not think mobile homes are always part of the affordable housing stock.

"I don't necessarily agree with trailers," Hedlund said. "Many people who live in trailers do not consider themselves low income. It's a lifestyle choice."

Hingham and Cohasset both have under 3 percent affordable housing according to figures compiled in 1990.

The House amendment could help towns like Hingham and Cohasset, where only a small percentage of its current housing is "affordable," thereby making the town a prime candidate for the comprehensive permit process.

Cohasset has plans to put a by-law allowing accessory dwellings before its next Town Meeting. This would encourage the type of "in-law" apartments that allow an elderly couple to remain in the town they love. This would count toward Cohasset's affordable housing stock if the House amendment is included in the final version of the Chapter 40B reforms.

Should all the projects now on the drawing board become reality, Hingham would probably cross the 10 percent mark, according to Hedlund.

Once redeveloped, the Hingham Shipyard may offer some affordable housing.

Hingham already have a small mobile home park off Rockland Street as well as some accessory dwellings and federally-subsidized housing which falls under the Hingham Housing Authority.

A number of comprehensive permit projects are also on the table, including a 2,266-unit retirement community off Whiting Street in South Hingham. However, what portion of those will actually count as affordable units has not yet been determined. The project was designed to benefit an older couple who have a lot of equity in their home but have a problem with monthly payments. The retirement community would require a $100,000 to $300,000 down payment that would preserve the equity in couple's home, while providing housing they can afford. The state Department of Housing and Community Development is making a decision as to whether this type of arrangement will qualify as affordable housing, according to Bradley.

One of the complexities of the law is that what is affordable housing for one community is not affordable for another.

"You have to look at it on a town by town basis," Hedlund said.

One of the House reforms proposed by Bradley would establish a commission to define affordable housing. The committee, made up of members from the House and Senate and housing advocates, would reexamine how affordable housing is defined under the law.

One of the reforms Hedlund would like to see is that developers be required to have a higher percentage of affordable units in construction under a Chapter 40B comprehensive permit.

"If you can max out the land, you should have to build a higher percentage of affordable housing," Hedlund said.

The affordable housing reform will affect Weymouth, but will not change redevelopment at the former South Weymouth Naval Air Station, according to Executive Director Kenneth Goff.

When the reuse plan was voted in, the only criteria for the planned senior housing was that it be for people over 55. Where there is no requirement for affordable housing, the prices of the units will probably be market driven, although it is premature to determine what form the senior housing development Goff said.

Town looks into extra moorings

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The town is looking into an old agreement with the Cohasset Yacht Club that could create as many as 18 new moorings in crowded Cohasset Harbor.

In 1995, when the town was getting ready for the recent $1.2 million harbor dredging project, the yacht club asked for the town's support in lobbying Congress to push the federal waterway line farther out into the harbor. The club had encroached on the line, and the town would not have received permits for the dredging work until either the club no longer encroached the line or it was changed. Only an act of Congress can change the federal waterway line, and support from the local board of selectmen is needed.

The yacht club appeared before the board in March of 1995 to propose the line change, which also included a dock and float reconfiguration in order to provide additional moorings for its members. Part of the deal was that the reconfiguration would eliminate a "spider float" and that area would be given to the town for public moorings. A letter from then-yacht club commodore R. Gary Vanderweil said the new public area would have room for 18, 21-foot boats.

The plan was adopted unanimously, and the federally-funded harbor dredging project was completed early last year.

But the town has yet to see the new mooring spaces, and now officials doubt there is even room for 18 spaces.

"I talked to [Harbormaster John "Moose" Winters] and he said there just isn't room for 18 spaces," Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen Tuesday.

"The 18 new spaces were definitely part of the deal," said Selectman Michael Sullivan, who was on the board at the time. "The issue was that everyone would have benefited."

At the request of selectmen, Haddad will review the plan as proposed in 1995 and report back to the board.

Annual event raises $16,000 for Children's Hospital

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Last Saturday and Sunday, the entire Cohasset tennis community got together for its annual Children's Hospital Benefit Tennis Tournament, amassing over $16,000.

The event, dating back to the 1950s, is played on the exquisite privately owned courts around town, 21 in all being used.

"That is half of the beauty of the tournament," said a smiling Daralynn Evans, the head coordinator of the tourney.

The tournament was played every year from the 50s up until the 70s, at which point, there was a "lull", as Evans called it. But about ten years ago, former ballboys and ballgirls from the original tourney resurrected the event, raising more money than ever before for the Children's Hospital.

In addition to the cover charge for playing in the tournament (the benefits going to the hospital), there was also a large silent auction last Friday night, doubling last years total money raised.

In the tournament, there were four different categories of skill levels, comprising all 100 mixed doubles teams which came to Cohasset for the tourney.

The least competitive level was the "C" group, which was won by local partners Shellanne Durkin and Donal Cahill. The pair took the championships in the C's, defeating Janet Robinson and Mike Rawson in three sets, also earning themselves an automatic berth in next year's "B-Level" competition.

The B's were won by Cohasset's Ralph and Nancy Froio, who survived a three-set match with Judy Armen and Doug LeBlanc.

The next category of players was the "A-Level," a highly competitive

Picking up where they left off

Cohasset 9-year-old baseball All-stars off to a great start

Connor Murphy brings the heat for Cohasset 10-year old All-Star team last week.

The Cohasset 9-year-old All-star Team, on the heels of their undefeated championship as 8-year-olds in 2000, have won their first four games in the District 8 travel season. Led by powerful hitting, superb pitching and graceful fielding, the youngsters have shown that their success last year promises even greater fortune this season. Playing in the Williamsport District 8 Little League, Cohasset has defeated Rockland (10-2), Braintree (14-7), Abington (8-5) and Stoughton (13-0).

The last game, held at the recently improved Beechwood Field in Cohasset, was highlighted by a combined no-hitter pitched by Eamon Davis, Robby McCunney and Jordan Berry. The three hurlers allowed only six runners -all through walks- to reach base, while each logged four strikeouts in their respective two inning stints. The infield handled every play flawlessly and allowed no Stoughton opponent to reach base. In a fitting display of fielding prowess, catcher

Cohasset's team of Scribner and Ingber chosen among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process was not an easy one.

Several of the young men you see here as with "Honorable Mention" recognition were seriously considered for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

For example, Cohasset captain Chris Golden put together a laudable senior campaign playing in the top singles spots against premier competition and helping the Skippers to their first post-season state tourney berth in several years.

After consulting with area coaches, however, these are the choices we made for our 2001 All-Scholastic boys tennis team:

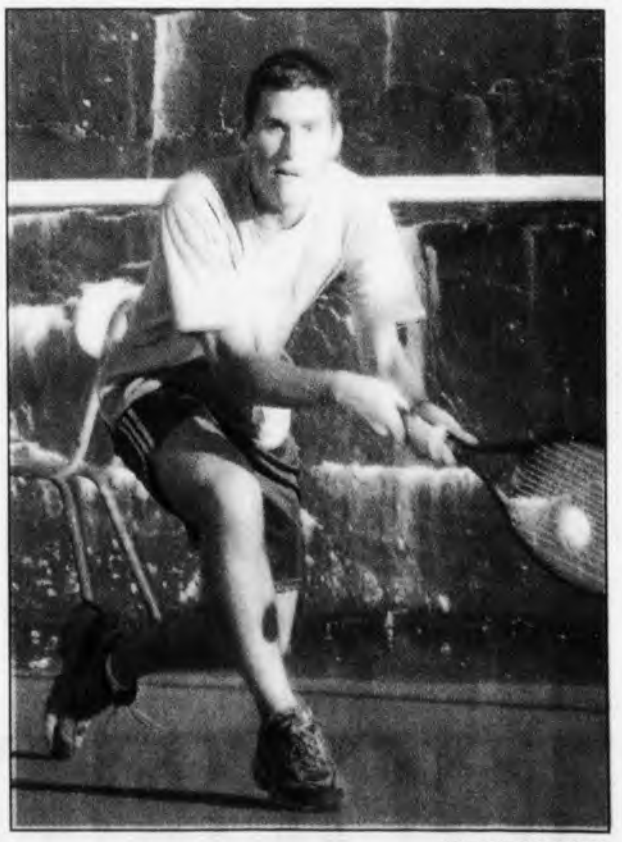
Singles

Brian Marsden - Sophomore
First Singles - Hingham

Brian Marsden

Unquestionably one of the most dominating forces on the South Shore's singles courts...Just a sophomore, Marsden has played at the number one spot for two years and went unblemished this season in the Patriot League at 14-0...Marsden is currently ranked 12th in New England among 16-and-under tennis players...His solid play on the court helped Hingham cruise to a league title and advance to the South Sectional finals for the second-straight year...Was a semifinalist in the South Sectional Individual tournament, where his only defeats in two years have come...Marsden was a defenseman on Hingham's Div. 1 State Champion hockey team this past winter...Marsden will spend the summer competing in New England and national tournaments, and will be the Harbormen's top returnee next season.

Ryan McDonald - Junior
(Capt.)
First Singles - Marshfield



Ryan McDonald

Had a stellar season at the number one singles spot for the Rams, leading his team to the Div. 1 South Sectional semifinals...McDonald finished the year at 17-2, splitting matches against Atlantic Coast League champion Duxbury and his only other loss of the season came in the state semifinals against Newton North's number one man, who was second at the state individuals...An ACL All-star, McDonald gave up football to concentrate more on his tennis game and it showed...He had big shoes to fill in the number one spot with the graduation of Brandon Benbenek, who went undefeated for two years, and improved considerably over his 7-8 record at the number two spot a year ago...During the summer, McDonald attends the College Tennis Academy and is an instructor at the South Shore YMCA...He will be among the top returnees to the Rams tennis squad. Marshfield coach Glenn Ward: "The best things that have been said about Ryan have been from other coaches in the league. They were very impressed with how much he improved. He's deserved all recognition he's received because he's worked so hard."

Sam Bitetti - Sophomore
First Singles - Norwell

Posted a 20-1 record his sophomore season, the only loss coming in the semi-finals of the state individual tourney to Newton North's Luke Tedaldi...Did not drop a single set in posting a perfect 14-0 record in South Shore League play...Avenged two of the three loss-

Legion team says wait 'til next year

With all but two players back next season, hope abounds for Post 118 squad

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset-Scituate Legion baseball team finished out its season at 7-12-1, but just you wait until this team takes the field again next year.

The majority of the players of this team, narrowly missing the fifth playoff spot in District 10 by a mere game and a half, will return for at least one more crack at a run through the Summer league playoffs.

Only two of the 18 members of this ballclub graduated High School this spring, Nate Walsh and Tim Duggan, both of Scituate.

Walsh was a utility outfielder both for the Legion and the phenomenal Scituate Sailors team, as he played in only his first season under venerable coach Scott Arnold.

Duggan was arguably the best all-around athlete on the field. In addition to his terrific pitching, hitting and defensive skills on the baseball diamond, he was also a Patriot League All-Star in hockey this past winter for Scituate High School.

"Timmy is just an unbelievable athlete," noted Arnold, who did not utilize Duggan's pitching much this past season, finding his rock-solid centerfield play much more valuable.

The pitchers of the team (the ones who actually were used as pitchers, that is) were the cornerstone of this team. Jessie Cole, Jason Connelly and Tom Fitzgerald, all of whom should return for next year, kept the C-S squad together with a workhorse attitude and an ability to stay in the game.

"We went to relief pitchers less than half a dozen times in a twenty game season," reported Arnold. "That's incredible. There were so many games where we just didn't hit for them."

Cole, the ace of the staff, did not have as fantastic a record as many would have thought, but that was largely owing to the fact that he was generally matched up with the mettle of the schedule. Even still, he managed to keep his team within striking distance in every game he pitched.

Connelly had a knack all year for stepping up in huge situations, including three very impressive wins over the powerhouse teams of Weymouth and Quincy.

Fitzgerald, the only lefty of the staff, showed Cohasset-Scituate why he was such an important part of the BC High State Championship run.

But truly, it takes a full team to have a successful season and, unfortunately, that was not what Arnold had on the bench often enough. He says that there were only six games where he had his full compliment of regulars.

"The [bench players] did a good job keeping us in it, but when we es he suffered as a freshman, bettering Hingham's Brian Marsden (a fellow Mariner All-Scholastic) and Wellesley's Tom Dohlman in non-league action, led the Clippers to their extraordinary sixth consecutive unbeaten season in South Shore League play. A two time South Shore League All-Star, also a SSL All-Star in cross country this fall, plays tennis year round, concentrating particularly hard in the winter months leading up to the school season, had his ranking as high as fourth in the USTA New England 14-and-under division last year... a Globe and Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic...Norwell tennis coach Jay Swartz: "Sam really came back focussed and ready for the challenges this season. He plays with as much intelligence as someone who has been playing this game for 20 years, but he's also got the enthusiasm and exuberance of a 16-year old."

Brian Holmquest - Freshman
Second Singles - Marshfield

Brian Holmquest

Provided an impressive one-two punch in the singles slots with fellow All-Scholastic Ryan McDonald and helped lead the team to the Div. 1 South Sectional semifinals. Holmquest went 16-3 from the Rams' number two singles spot, twice dropping matches to Atlantic Coast League champion Duxbury and his only other loss of the season came in the state semis against a Newton North player who finished first at the state individuals...An ACL All-star, Holmquest's straight-set win over BC High clinched the third point in a 3-2 win over the Eagles in the quarterfinals of the state tourney...In the fall, Holmquest was the number two runner on the Rams' ACL champion cross country team...He ranked among the top three in his freshman class...During the summer months, Holmquest plays in USTA tournaments and runs with friends...He will be one of the top returnees next season. Marshfield coach Glenn Ward: "Brian has an excellent attitude on the court. He talks to himself all the time and that keeps him calm. He has a great demeanor and is a very intelligent kid."

Mike Wiltshire - Junior
Second Singles - Norwell

Mike Wiltshire

An extremely pleasant surprise for coach Jay Schwartz this season at second singles...after being used as a part time doubles player during the 2000 season, Wiltshire emerged as rock solid compliment to Sam Bitetti this season, going 9-1 in South Shore League play and 13-2 overall, helping the Clippers to their sixth straight South Shore League championship...all but one of his wins was in two sets...South Shore League All-Star...would like to play tennis in college and is leaning towards a major in engineering...got better as the season went, according to Norwell coach Jay Swartz... first loss came in the second match of the season, while he was playing through a flu in the other...plays tennis year round as a member of the Weymouth Tennis Club and plays and has participated in several prominent tourneys, including the New England Open earlier this month...Norwell coach Jay Swartz: "It was obvious early o ntheat Mike had worked really hard on his game in the off-season and was very serious about this season. He also shot up in size and improved his conditioning a lot. As his confidence improved, he kept getting more aggressive and he just kept making progress. I look at what we have in the top two spots with Sam (Bitetti) and Mike for next year, and it's tough to imagine too many teams matching up with us there."

Chris Hickey - Junior
Third Singles - Silver Lake

Chris Hickey

Enjoyed a sensational 18-2 junior campaign playing second and third singles, helping lead the Lakers in to the second round of the Div. 1 state tourney...will likely play number one singles next year with the graduations of senior captains Lyon Carter and Patrick Bugbee...avenged both of his early season losses—to counterparts in Barnstable and Bridgewater-Raynham—by beating them the second time around...in fact, Chris also got the better of his B-R rival in a third meeting in the state tourney...posted several come-from-behind victories this season...consistency, focus and intensity are all said to be hallmarks of Chris' game...plays tennis year round...also a standout for the Silver Lake golf team, playing in the third and fourth spots this past fall, and likely to be one of the top two duffers and possibly a team captain this coming season...ranked 10th in his class of nearly 400...would like to play golf or tennis in college...has looked at the Universities of Virginia, North Carolina, Wake Forest and Boston College...Silver Lake tennis coach Craig Brown: "I was expecting a lot from Chris this year, but he really stepped it up even more than I'd hoped. He had so many big wins that made the difference between us winning and losing matches. He's a real competitor. I'm really looking forward to seeing what he can do as a senior."

Doubles

Justin Meddaugh / Rory O'Connor
First Doubles - Norwell

These South Shore League All-Stars went 12-1 in their first seasons as full-time members of the varsity squad, helping the Clippers to an amazing sixth straight unbeaten season in SSL play...Justin, a senior, who played tennis all four years at Norwell High, will attend Union College in Schenectady, New York this fall, where he hopes to play tennis...plans to major in computer science and minor in history...Rory, an honor roll student and sophomore, has also played basketball and run cross country in his two years at Norwell High, and is a member of the JSA debating club...communication and chemistry were the principal keys to Justin and Rory's success, according to Norwell Coach Jay Swartz: "Individually, Justin and Rory probably weren't as talented as a few of the teams they beat. But they just did the little things as a team that others don't do. They really became a great unit in a short amount of time."

Justin Meddaugh

Rory O'Connor

Dave Ingber / Jeff Scribner
First Doubles - Cohasset

Dave Ingber

Both of these young men started out the season with aspirations of playing singles, but agreed to play doubles when coach Pam Wilson convinced the powerful senior Scribner and baseline standout sophomore Ingber of how well they would compliment one another...finished the season 10-1, with their only loss coming in a heart-breaker to fellow South Shore League and Mariner All-Scholastics Greg Hughes and Matt Edwards of Hanover (6-4, 3-6, 5-7)...Dave and Jeff beat Edwards with another partner in straight sets in the first meeting with Hanover... handed another SSL and Mariner All-Scholastic tandem, Justin Meddaugh and Rory O'Conner, their only loss of the season (7-5, 6-4)...Scribner will attend Bryant College in the fall and major in marketing and finance...Ingber, who also plays basketball at Cohasset High and swims, has been a Mariner Correspondent for the last two years...Cohasset coach Pam Wilson: "You could see they both wanted to play singles this season, so I think they were a little disappointed when I asked them to (play doubles). But they obviously didn't let it affect their games. They both really took to it and got a sense of each other out on the court really quick."

Jeff Scribner

Matt Edwards / Greg Hughes - First Doubles - Hanover

Matt Edwards

This talented duo went 10-2 in the regular season for the South Shore League runners up...Both seniors, Edwards and Hughes caused fits for doubles teams in the SSL this season, defeating everyone but Norwell...In their two meetings with SSL champs Norwell, the duo pushed the match to three sets...The combination of Hughes' vocal leadership and Edwards' leading by example helped the Indians qualify for the South Sectional team tournament...Hughes, who also spent some time this season at second doubles, was a captain on Hanover's team and plans to attend UMass Lowell to study Engineering, while Edwards will attend UMass Amherst to study Computer Science...Both are considering continuing their tennis careers in college. Hanover coach John Schrader: "They're both very aggressive on the court. They attack the ball and they want to put it away. They're both hard hitters. Greg is more vocal and Matt's kind of quiet, but they both complimented each other and put together a nice match."

Seth Purcell / Nate Kingdon - First Doubles - Hingham

Talented duo went 9-0 in the Patriot League, as players at Hingham's top five spots went unbeaten in league play this season...Purcell, a senior, and Kingdon, a junior, with continually solid play at the first doubles spot helped Hingham advance to the Div. 1 South Sectional finals for the second consecutive year and helped the Harbormen run away with the league title...Purcell and Kingdon rolled through the opening rounds of the South Sectional tourney against Framingham and Brookline...Purcell is most proud of he and Kingdon's play in the semifinal match against Bridgewater-Raynham, when after dropping the first set 1-6, the duo charged back to force a third set and a victory, which advanced Hingham to the Sectional finals...Purcell will be off to Tufts University next year and is currently undecided on a major...He is looking into continuing his tennis career...Kingdon will be among the team's top returnees next season.

Swim team stays perfect

Wins over Eel River Swim Club and MASK up record to 5-0

By Eileen McBride
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Cohasset Swim Team improved to a perfect 5-0 with their mid-week victory over Eel River Swim Club and a thrilling Friday victory over an impressive MASK squad.

The home town team came from behind in the latter meet in a breathtakingly close finish, to clinch the win and remain undefeated.

The afternoon got off to a winning start with a shut out from the eight and under boys in the 100-yards medley relay (1st: Carrier, Buckley; Shipp; Durkin, T., 2nd: Durkin, J.; Campbell; Mahoney; Durkin, T.; 3rd: Lynner; Murphy, J.; Murphy, C.; McCormack). The girls just missed the win but took second, third and sixth places (2nd: Karski; Fontaine; Musto; Michalowski; 3rd: Axelson; Donohue; Murphy; Farren, A.; 6th: Farren, N.; Serafkas; Berbe; Carrier). The ten and under boys and girls, again, were forced back into second place, but the twelve and under boys and girls bounced back with wins in both of their events (boys, 10 and under: 2nd: Connors; Porter; Doonan; Ulmer; 3rd: Hurley; Yeager; Daly; Harper; 4th: Stevenson; Whitney; Queenan; McCormack; girls, 10 and under: 2nd: Ryan; Lehr, S.; Lehr, T.; Mahoney, C.; 5th: Mahoney, M.; Sullivan; Meikleham; Libby; 6th: Costa; Coggins; Baumgarten; Dickinson; boys, 12 and under: 1st: Hunt; Daly; Dickinson; Conway; 2nd: Shipp; Musto; Doonan; Cunningham; girls, 12 and under: 1st: Hernan; Durkin; Garber; Englander; 5th: Sacks; Fortin; Swain; McCarthy; 6th: Campbell; Hurd; Anderson; Daly).

In the 200-yard relays the seventeen and under boys added to the score with first and third place finishes (boys, 17 and under: 1st: Bilton; Faber; Ingber; Tehranian; 3rd: Roach, K.; Roach; Flynn; Hughes). The girls were just a fraction of a second away from winning, but took second, fifth and sixth positions (2nd: Musto; Anderson; Jacobucci, G.; O'Brien; 5th: Orsini; Faber; Larson; Lehr; 6th: Regan; Hurley, K.; Ogrodnik; McCarthy). As the medley relays came to an end the score was tied at 48 points.

In the first of the 50-yard freestyles, the ten and under boys were pushed back into third, fourth and fifth places (3rd: Doonan, B.; 4th: Stevenson, G.; 5th: Hurley, P.). The girls had a little more success, securing second, third and fourth places (2nd: Lehr, T.; 3rd: Meikleham, A.; 4th: Ryan, K.), but without a win Cohasset slipped behind their competitors for the first time in the meet, and probably for the first time in the season.

The 100-yard individual medleys were up next and Cohasset was able to pull back a win in the both the 12 and under races and in the boys fourteen and under race (boys, 12 and under: 1st: Conway, C.; 3rd: Daly, B.; 4th: Doonan, P.; girls, 12 and under: 1st: Durkin, J.; 5th: Englander, E.; 6th: Swain, K.; boys, 14 and under: 1st: Berg, P.). There followed a brief loss of pace in the fourteen and under girls event (3rd: Anderson, C.; 5th: Larson, J.; 6th: Ogrodnik, M.), but the seventeen and under boys and girls pulled back to win both of their races (boys, 1st: Bilton, B.; 3rd: Blackburn, C.; girls: 1st: O'Brien, K.; 4th: Orsini, M.; 6th: Foley, T.). With the first two events complete, Cohasset was still behind, but by a decreasing margin (86-81).

The eight and under boys started the freestyle event with their by now, characteristic enthusiasm. They swept the board, taking first, second and third places (1st: Carrier, J.; 2nd: Durkin, T.; 3rd: Durkin, J.). The eight and under girls were less productive (3rd: Fontaine, E.; 5th: Michalowski, A.; 6th: Murphy, C.), and the ten and under boys and girls followed suit (boys, 10 and under: 3rd: Ulmer, W.; 4th: Porter, L.; 6th: Harper, W.; girls, 10 and under: 2nd: Lehr, S.; 4th: Mahoney, M.; 6th: Mahoney, C.). MASK moved ahead once again (109-94).

In the 50-yard event, the 12 and under boys started well with first, second and fifth place finishes (1st: Conway, C.; 2nd: Dickinson, R.; 5th: Musto, C.). The 12 and under girls managed to place third, fifth and sixth (3rd: Englander, E.; 5th: Sacks, M.; 6th: McCarthy, M.), and the 14 and under boys failed to make the win, but took second, third and sixth places (2nd: Roach, K.; 3rd: Berg, P.; 5th: Gammon, B.). The fourteen and under girls followed closely with second, fourth and fifth place finishes (2nd: Lehr, R.; 4th: Larson, J.; 5th: Musto, L.), and the seventeen and under boys finished second, third and fourth (2nd: Ingber, D.; 3rd: Tehranian, K.; 4th: Faber, S.). As the 50-yard freestyles were coming to a conclusion, the seventeen and under girls just managed to push ahead of MASK and secure the win for Cohasset (1st: Jacobucci, G.; 5th: Regan, D.; 6th: Foley, T.). The score was now MASK 138, Cohasset 119.

The butterfly event got off to an optimistic start with a win for the eight and under boys (1st: Shipp, M.; 2nd: Durkin, T.; 4th: Lynner, W.). The eight and under girls put in a good performance but fell behind to take second, fourth and sixth positions (2nd: Karski, E.; 4th: Musto, E.; 6th: Murphy, O.). The ten and under boys bounced back with a win, and the girls came close, but again took second, fourth and sixth places (boys: 1st: Doonan, B.; 5th: Daly, R.; 6th: Harper, W.; girls: 2nd: Mahoney, C.; 3rd: Lehr, T.; 6th: Meikleham, A.). Cohasset had one further win in the remaining four 25-yard butterflies (boys, 12 and under: 2nd: Dickinson, R.; 3rd: Doonan, P.; 4th: Faber, C.; girls, 12 and under: 2nd: Hernan, E.; Garber, C.; 6th: Swain, K.; boys, 14 and under: 1st: Berg, P.; girls, 14 and under: 3rd: Ogrodnik, M.; 4th: Faber, A.; 5th: Crowley-Buck, M.).

In the 50-yard races the seventeen and under boys were pushed back into second, third and fourth places, but Garet Jaobucci led the girls to a morale boosting win in their race (boys: 2nd: Ingber, D.; 3rd: Flynn, C.; 4th: Roach, J.; girls: 1st: Jacobucci, G.; 4th: Orsini, M.; 5th: McCarthy, K.R.). At the half way point Cohasset was trailing MASK, by nineteen points (162-181).

The eight and under boys once again got the breaststroke event off to a great start with first, second and third place finishes (1st: Buckley, T.; 2nd: Campbell, B.; 3rd: Murphy, J.). For the remaining three 25-yard breaststrokes Cohasset missed the win, but claimed second place (girls, 8 and under: 2nd: Fontaine, E.; 4th: Axelson, D.; 5th: Donohue, M.; boys, 10 and under: 2nd: Ulmer, W.; 4th: Porter, L.; 5th: Yeager, J.; girls, 10 and under: 2nd: Lehr, S.; 4th: McElhinny, C.; 5th: Costa, A.).

Spirits were raised again when the twelve and under boys finished first, second and fourth in the 50-yard event, and when the girls followed them with a win in their race (boys: 1st: Hunt, A.; 2nd: Daly, B.; 4th: Musto, C.; girls: 1st: Durkin, L.; 3rd: Swain, K.; 5th: Fortin, S.). The fourteen and under boys and girls couldn't quite keep up the winning pace (boys: 2nd: Roach, K.; 3rd: Gammon, B.; girls: 2nd: Anderson, C.; 3rd: Faber, A.; 5th: Ogrodnik, M.), but the event finished on a high with wins for both the seventeen and under boys and girls (boys: 1st: Faber, S.; 3rd: Roach, J.; 4th: Blackburn, C.; girls: 1st: O'Brien, K.; 4th: Hurley, C.; 5th: Hurley, K.). The visitors still, however, maintained their lead with 221 points to Cohasset's 212.

The 25-yard backstroke was up next and the home team swimmers produced excellent performances to win two out of the four races (boys, 8 and under: 1st: Carrier, J.; 2nd: Buckley, T.; 4th: Durkin, J.; girls, 8 and under: 2nd: Karski, E.; 3rd: Michalowski, A.; 6th: Musto, E.; boys, 10 and under: 1st: Hurley, P.; 2nd: Queenan, C.; 5th: Daly, R.; girls, 10 and under: 4th: Ryan, K.; 5th: Mahoney, M.; 6th: Costa, A.). Cohasset was now just three points behind MASK.

In the 50-yard backstroke they did even better. The twelve and under boys and girls both took first place and for the first time in the meet Cohasset was ahead - by five points (boys: 1st: Hunt, A.; 2nd: Shipp, A.; 4th: Daly, B.; girls: 1st: Hernan, E.; 5th: Garber, C.; 6th: Campbell, A.). The fourteen and under boys added to the lead by producing another win (1st: Hernan, A.; 3rd: Faber, C.; 5th: Gammon, B.), and although the girls finished third, fourth and sixth (3rd: Lehr, R.; 4th: Musto, L.; 6th: Crowley-Buck, M.), success for the seventeen and under boys and girls put Cohasset seven points ahead (boys, 17 and under: 1st: Bilton, B.; 3rd: Tehranian, K.; girls, 17 and under: 1st: Jacobucci, G.; 3rd: O'Brien, K.; 6th: Foley, T.).

Entering the last leg of the meet, the eight and under boys gave their usual excellent performance to win the first of the 100-yard races and add a critical eight points to the score (1st: Buckley; Durkin, J.; Durkin, T.; Carrier, J.; 2nd: Campbell; Lynner; Murphy, J.; Shipp; 3rd: Whitney; Mahoney; Murphy, C.; Durkin, Je.). The eight and under girls missed the win, and took second, fourth and sixth places (2nd: Fontaine; Karski; Musto; Michalowski; 4th: Berbe; Donohue; Serafkas; Murphy; 6th: Farren, A.; Berbe; Farren, N.; Axelson). The ten and under boys and girls competed hard to protect the team's slim advantage but were unable to snatch the win from a determined MASK lineup (boys; 2nd: Ulmer; Daly; Porter; Doonan; 5th: Queenan; Stevenson; Harper; Hurley; 6th: Yeager; McCormack; McCarthy; Faber; girls: 2nd: Lehr, T.; Ryan, K.; Mahoney, C.; Lehr, S.; 4th: Libby; Zappolo; Coggins; Costa; 6th: Dickinson; Donohue; Meikleham; Mahoney, M.). The lead had now dwindled to a fragile three points.

Tension mounted as the twelve and under boys and girls took to the blocks. With everything to play for, the boys kept their nerve and finished first, second and fourth (1st: Conway; Dickinson; Cunningham; Hunt; 2nd: DeGiacomo; Shipp; Musto; Doonan; 4th: Wheelwright; McCarthy; Porter; Faber). Cohasset had crept ahead another four points. The twelve and under girls added again to the score with a breathtakingly close first place finish (1st: Hernan; Garber; Englander; Durkin; 4th: Regan; Lee; McBride; Plante).

The seventeen and under boys and girls were the last to swim. Cohasset had an eleven-point lead, but anything could happen. The boys were up first and their supporters watched anxiously as they held on to win the 200-yard event (1st: Bilton; Tehranian; Faber; Ingber; 3rd: Berg; Roach; Roach; Flynn). Cohasset had now effectively won the meet, but it wasn't until the seventeen and under girls completed the races (3rd: Anderson; Regan; Orsini; Hurley; 5th: Musto; Larson; Lehr; Hurley; 6th: Crowley-Buck; Muir, C.; Muir, Ch.; Faber.), and the scores were declared, that Cohasset's swimmers could truly celebrate.

What an exciting and highly entertaining afternoon. Congratulations are in store for the Cohasset swimmers, who competed right to the final whistle, and to their coaching staff, Alison Hughes, Ted Hughes and Garet Jacobucci, who helped get them there. Congratulations also to the excellent MASK squad who were such challenging competitors. We all look forward to the team's next meet against Scituate Yacht Club on Friday, July 27.

Mariners are American League champs

Led by strong pitching and decisive hitting, the Mariners defeated the Indians 9-7 at Barnes field to win the Cohasset Little League American Minors championship. Each of the seven teams in the Minors consisted of about twelve children aged 9 to10.

The league, designed to be instructional in nature, helps prepare kids for the Major League Division by teaching fundamental skills and promoting the appeal of baseball. During the regular twelve game season, coaches attempt to give the players a chance to try various positions and learn different aspects of the game. In the playoffs, though, attention turns to the value of healthy competition.

The Mariners' final game capped a successful playoff run in which they won all but one of their games in the three round tourney. In the single elimination first round contest, they slipped by the Angels in a 2-1 nailbiter on Justin Yeager's double in the bottom half of the last inning. Pitching by McCunney and Andy McKenna held the Angels to only one run.

The Mariners then wasted no time in winning two straight shut outs over the Royals to take the semi-finals and earn the right to the finals. Pitching by McKenna, Robby McCunney, Justin Yeager, Andrew Graham and Eric Studley limited their opponents to no runs in the semifinals. Home runs by Yeager, John Maher and McCunney balanced the effort.

After losing the opener in the championship series to the Indians, 5-0, the Mariners came back in the second game led by strong pitching and hitting to force the finals to the third game. In the last game of the three game series, Adam Berger's triple to deep right center and Ross Collins-Wooley's triple off a powerful drive over the left fielder's head highlighted the Mariner's hitting. The defense was led by Sam Bilbo's impressive snag of a high fly to right to prevent an extra base hit.

During the regular season, which began in late April, the Mariners amassed 12 wins while losing four and tying one. As with all good teams, every player contributed to the success of the season. Effective teams also tend to be led by players with exceptional performances, and this team rose to the occasion. In fact, four of the Mariners were chosen to represent Cohasset on its twelve-player nine year old all-star travel team: Justin Yeager, Robby McCunney, Andrew McKenna and John Maher. All four of these boys hit extremely well while battign over .400.

Robby McCunney posted a phenomenal pitching performance. In 35 innings, he allowed only two hits, one run and five walks while notching 95 strikeouts. During one stretch of the season, he hurled 27 consecutive hitless, scoreless inning.

Throughout the season, all team members made winning contributions, including Tyler Durant as a catcher, Chase Stebbins as third baseman, Marcus Charles as a centerfielder and Andrew Graham as pitcher.

Bob McCunney, Doug Yeager and Bob Stebbins coached the team.

had the line-up I wanted, we dominated," affirmed the manager.

Dominate they did, as in those six games, the team was 6-0, including two wins over Weymouth, two over Canton, and one apiece over Milton and Quincy.

Since Arnold was able to hand pick the team himself, there really were no weak links in the starting line-ups, or on the bench. However, that is just a part of managing, said Arnold.

"That is one of the hardest things about coaching," he said. "We had 18 guys out there who could play ball."

Other potential key returnees for next year include Greg Levin (lead-off hitter, outfield), Alex Knight (second base), Mike Gulinello (infield), Eric Dmohowski (outfield) and Brian Wood (first base) from Scituate High School. Mike Snowdale (utility man) and Tim Straughn (catcher, utility man) from Cohasset High, catcher Brian Signorelli (Thayer Academy, Scituate) and first baseman Greg Smith (B.C. High, Cohasset).

Ever the optimist, Arnold managed to find one sunny spot of missing the playoffs.

"It is about time we get to go the beach," said the coach and father of young sons. "We are looking forward to enjoying the summer

He also commiserated with several of his players who would come straight from their summer jobs to the games.

"We had a great season, and everybody is happy," he concluded.

Picking up where they left off

John Giuggio threw out a runner trying to steal second to end the game. Stoughton entered the game with a 3-0 record before encountering the hitting depth of the Cohasset squad. The 13 hit attack was led by Jordan Berry's three hits, Robby McCunney's 4 RBI's and two hits each by John Kearney, Eamon Davis and Todd Emanuelo.

A day earlier, the visiting Cohasset team beat Abington 8-5 on the strength of pitching by Tommy Buckley and Brendan Doonan. Chris Brown led the hitting with four RBIs including a double and a sacrifice fly. The Abington team had just completed a successful run in the Easton baseball tournament in which they reached the finals of the 16 team tourney before losing their first game of the season to Marlboro 2-1 in the finals.

The Cohasset squad opened their season with an impressive 10-2 win over a good Rockland team. Again the hitting attack was led by Brown (3 hits), and Buckley, McCunney, Berry and Kearney all of whom had 2 hits apiece. McCunney, Buckley and Berry shared the pitching chores and limited their opponents to three hits.

This season offers different challenges for the impressive youngsters. For the first time, they will enter two tournaments-one this weekend in Raynham and another, the following weekend in Middleboro. In these events, they will be matched against many different teams on the South shore ranging from South Plymouth to Bridgewater and Brockton. The competition is likely to be strong, but this group of boys has the talent, desire and potential to do well against any nine year old team. Newcomers Justin Yeager, and John Maher, along with veteran infielder Andy McKenna are expected to make major contributions to this year's team.

The team is coached by Bob McCunney, Mike Kearney, Peter Buckley and Ralph Berry.

Salt marsh project bugs mosquito control study

By Rick Collins
RCOLLINS@CNC.COM

The ongoing James Meadow salt-marsh restoration project has caused the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project to put a hold on its mosquito breeding control study of the marsh.

The group was studying James Meadow to create an Open Water Management Plan to help deal with the mosquito problem around the area. At the same time, the town, along with Tutela Engineering, has been working at creating a salt-marsh reclamation plan for the meadow that would help kill the tall reeds growing around the meadow, and restore the tidal flats — all while not flooding out the abutting residents.

But Tutela and the town have been at loggerheads with the Army Corps of Engineers over the proper method for reintroducing saltwater into the meadow. Last year, Tutela installed neoprene [rubber] wedges in order to keep the tidal gates slightly ajar, and earlier this month, the engineering firm told selectmen it believed the problem solved. However, the Army Corps contends that the best solution is to install self-regulating tide gates.

While the two sides battle it out, the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project has decided to put its study of the mosquito problem on hold until a solution is reached.

"We were told by the Army Corps of Engineers that they could possibly have the town install self-regulating tide gates and possibly have more water in the salt marsh, and we can't figure out what areas are most likely to produce mosquitoes until that is resolved," said Ellen Orrell, an entomologist with the mosquito control project.

Areas likely to provide a fertile breeding ground for mosquitoes, heavily depends on where the tidal waters go.

She said the areas most likely to provide a fertile breeding ground for mosquitoes in an area such as a salt marsh, heavily depends on where the tidal waters go.

"The areas that produce salt marsh mosquitoes are the areas that receive tidal flow in moon tides, and that would change from what currently exists," she said. As a result, until the mosquito control project knows what the water levels are going to be, it's unable to design an appropriate mosquito control system for the meadow.

The Open Water Management Plan system is actually fairly simple — control mosquitoes by using fish to eat the larvae.

"The old system was to take water off the marsh so that there wouldn't be water to produce," said Orrell. "But that has a negative impact on the fish and the birds, such as Great Blue herons and egrets, which depend on those fish."

She said by digging some shallow ponds for the fish to eat the larvae, it could also bring back some of the birds as well as keep water in the marsh.

The more complicated part, however, is figuring out where exactly those ponds should be located. For that, Orrell said she needs to know where the tidal water levels will be in Jacobs Meadow.

"Then we might decide that we can fill in a ditch, or need one somewhere else," she said.

The group recently received the needed permits for the study. Orrell said the mosquito control project had permits originally about 10 years ago but had allowed them to expire. In fact, it was Tutela Engineering that notified the group of the mosquito problem during its work last year on the wastewater plant off Elm Street, which is on part of the meadow.

Along with creating a management plan for mosquitoes, the group, which Cohasset belongs to even though it is part of Norfolk County, also does spraying in yards with mosquito problems. She said the main spraying season is usually from Memorial Day to Labor Day, but could be longer depending on weather.

Town health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said the benefit of a mosquito control plan, besides dealing with nuisance issues, is that it can also help control the spread of diseases. Some of the diseases spread by mosquitoes include West Nile Virus, Eastern Equine Encephalitis, Dange Fever and malaria. "Malaria was relatively common in the old days," he said, "but there really haven't been any outbreaks lately."

Besides Jacobs Meadow, Godzik said any area where there is standing water is a potential breeding ground for mosquitoes, particularly the town's swampy areas.

Two years ago, as part of the James Brook Flood Control project, the town installed a third out-fall drainage pipe from James Meadow into Cohasset Harbor. However, the Army Corps of Engineers contend the work was done without the proper federal permits, and that they would have required the installation of a self-regulating tide gate on at least one of the out-fall pipes.

POLICE BRIEFS

Stolen car found, suspect at large

Police recovered an SUV that was stolen a month ago from Majestic Motors on Route 3A..

At about 11 p.m., Friday, Hingham police notified Cohasset police they were trying to stop a Jeep Cherokee heading southbound from the vicinity of the Route 228/3A intersection.

Within minutes of the Hingham dispatch, Cohasset police used their emergency lights, sirens and spot lights to try to stop the vehicle. Police said the driver continued southbound on 3A passing other motor vehicles and operating recklessly.

Police lost sight of the vehicle but subsequently received a dispatch that a Jeep Cherokee had crashed on Sohier Street in the Music Circus parking lot. They found the jeep off the roadway and into the woods. A check of the registration revealed the SUV had been stolen, police said.

Security at the Music Circus said the driver climbed out of the drivers' window and approached him to ask for change for a $100 bill. The security guard replied he would check the office for change, according to the police report. The security guard called police and then the suspect fled on foot into the woods off Sohier Street. The suspect is described as a 5-foot, 10-inch white male, 20-25 years old, wearing black pants and a dark-colored shirt. Officers checked the area but were unable to find the suspect. The motor vehicle was towed, secured and processed for fingerprints, police said.

B&E at plaza

Police are investigating break-ins at three businesses and a jewelry store in Cohasset Plaza over the weekend. Police said the manager of one of the businesses discovered the break-in at 8 p.m. Sunday night.

"As a result of his call, Officer Garrett Hunt and Sgt. David Cogill discovered three businesses on the second floor and King Jewelers were broken into," Det. Rick Grassie said.

Grassie said "an undetermined amount of items" were taken from each business, including some jewelry, computer equipment, check books and a pocket knife. In addition to the jewelry store, Gear for Sports, Newark Dynamics Inc., and Pana Pesca were also broken into.

Det. Greg Lennon and the State Police crime team are also helping with the investigation. Police think the break-ins occurred at about 4:30 a.m. Sunday.

"We are considering the possibility that it was a professional break-in," said Grassie, who said he could not elaborate at this time. Anyone with any information about the crir should call the police at 781-38 1055.

The Mohr, the merrier

Saturday Night Live veteran to play Music Circus

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSON@CNC.COM

He's worked side-by-side with comic legends like Chris Farley and Phil Hartman.

He's been in a number of major ollywood films. He's even starred in his wn television series. Now, comedian Jay lohr is coming to Cohasset. Mohr will eadline at The South Shore Music Circus dy 29.

Mohr said the Music Circus show is part of hat he's calling the "Filthy Clean Tour," hich got underway earlier this month. The ur, which will wrap up in October is the ical point of his schedule now.

"There's no classes you can take to learn about how to do comedy. You just walk into an open-mic club and start doing it. Once you try it, it's pretty overwhelming."

Comedian and actor Jay Mohr

"That's what I'm working on right now—the ur," Mohr said. "I'm pumped about coming to the lusic Circus because I'm looking forward to play- g in a tent."

And while he's busy with the tour, Mohr said he s other exciting projects he's recently wrapped up cluding a new film "Pluto" which he worked on ith fellow comedian and actor Eddie Murphy.

"It was amazing working with Ed," Mohr said. 'or the first couple days on the set, I couldn't even eak. On the third day, we hit it off really well when started talking."

Mohr said he loves doing movies and TV, but hen all is said and done, stand-up comedy is some- ing that's always been close to his heart.

"There's no classes you can take to learn about how to do comedy," he said. "You just walk into an open-mic club and start doing it. Once you try it, it's pretty overwhelming. I don't remember how well my first show went, but I guess it went well enough."

Mohr grew up in New Jersey, and he always dreamed about getting into comedy. He said he did his first comedy gig at age 15, and by age 20, he already had 10 national stand-up comedy shows under his belt.

Mohr's popularity and talent for the comedic craft soon steered him in another direction. He wanted to audition for Saturday Night Live, so he started compiling early stand-up clips of himself onto a video tape.

"I edited everything I had ever done into about four minutes," he said. "I sent it away, and I was called for an audition. I never thought I had a chance in hell."

He found out he got the Saturday Night Live job by phone while staying in a North Carolina hotel room. Mohr immediately found success on the show particularly with his impressions. He fine tuned his craft working with some great comedians including the late Phil Hartman, the late Chris Farley, and Adam Sandler.

"Those days took a lot out of me," Mohr said. "A lot of craziness came out. Working with that crew was great, but nothing will ever beat sitting in a room at 3 a.m. with Chris Farley and Phil Hartman telling stories. I mean, I got to work with those guys everyday. It was awesome."

Mohr's other accomplishments include being on TV shows like The Jeff Foxworthy Show and Local Heroes. He's also had roles in several hit movies — his best-known part being that of relentless sports agent Bob Sugar in "Jerry Maguire."

Other movie credits include, "The Barefoot Executive," "Picture Perfect" (with Jennifer Aniston)," "Suicide Kings (with Christopher Walken)," "Mafia," "Go," and "200 Cigarettes."

Mohr also recently starred in a short-lived TV series called "Action," which portrayed the life of a foul-mouth movie executive. But Mohr certainly knows how to take the good with the bad.

"I have no regrets," he said. "I wouldn't trade places with anyone. I've got the whole world ahead of me."

Mohr said he hopes a lot of folks will come see his show on Sunday, as he will be playing with another headlining comedian, John Pinnette.

"It's going to be Rock 'n' Roll, baby," he said. "It's going to be a great show with the same energy as a Black Crowes concert. No one loses."

For information and tickets to Mohr's show on July 29, call the South Shore Music Circus at (781) 383-9860.

America's Sweethearts (B-)

"America's Sweethearts" opens brightly, inspiring hope that this movie about the selling of movies will elude the curse often afflicting self-referential material. The set-up is witty: The now separated but previously America's screen sweethearts are starring in a new film that needs a miracle: a junket that will keep the critics wined, dined and busily occupied while hiding the fact that there is as yet no movie — this because the crazed director (Christopher Walken) wants to withhold it until the junket itself — and convincing the gullible critics that our separated stars are on the road to reconciliation. The miracle worker is publicist Lee (Billy Crystal), pressed into this bleak and intricate task by the studio head (Stanley Tucci) who had just fired but has now rehired him. Even before we fully glom to all this, we are shown trailers from earlier films by America's sweethearts, each more ridiculous than the one before.

Catherine Zeta-Jones and John Cusack are, supposedly, America's sweethearts.

The in-joke is on the critics (not my close personal friend David Manning — see footnote 1 — and my even closer pal, film critic and veteran junketeer Ed Symkus — footnote 2), who, played by real critics, are shown to be such airheads that even the inanities of this junket don't seem farfetched. Harried Lee's job is made more onerous by the fact that while America's sweetheart Eddie (John Cusack, in his best swain-cum-neurotic persona) yearns to reunite with America's sweetheart Gwen (Catherine Zeta-Jones), she's with a dunderhead Hispanic actor, Hector (Hank Azaria), who pronounces junket "honket." Getting Eddie and Gwen to the junket is Lee's first miracle; keeping them and Hector from doing something nuts is his second.

Meanwhile, Gwen's sister and aide-de-camp, Kiki (Julia Roberts), much put-upon by her demanding shrewish sister but still dutiful, is of course the lady we want to come out on top and, as if you haven't guessed it by now, Eddie begins to realize this, too. The plot is predictably Hollywoodish though the intricacies are minorly inventive, the climax is frenzied and nicely nasty — we finally see a swatch of the movie within the movie, and it's better than the movie itself (huh?) — and the denouement is suitably romantic.

"America's Sweethearts" is insufficiently tart and knowing in its writing and its plot writhings, and Crystal's Lee, who, as a good publicist-in-chief, should be ruthlessly goal-oriented, is instead mushily tenderhearted. Cusack, a good physical comedian, is given too few opportunities to mug and cavort, Roberts' Kiki is unconvincingly a wallflower second-fiddle, though Zeta-Jones' Gwen is plausibly a harridan and fraud. Seth Green is fine as Lee's designated successor, learning to lie and delude the stupid critics, like his mentor; Tucci is adroit as the honcho; Walken excels in his goof on auteur hauteur; and Alan Arkin as an Indian empowerment guru masterfully weds pseudo-Eastern "wisdom" to unctuous sincerity. This sweet trifle masquerading as a biting satire has the look but lacks an all-out onslaught, an instinct for the jugular and take-no-prisoners zest.

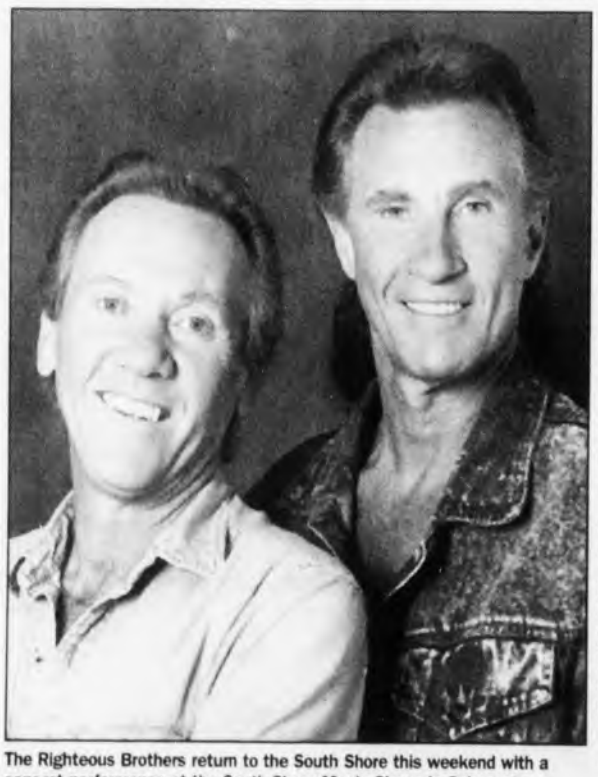
Lingering 'Melody'

Righteous Brothers play Music Circus July 27

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Like countless couples before them, Kalin Hatfield and his fiance , Ellen, have chosen "Unchained Melody" as their wedding ong. Unlike other brides and grooms, however, Kalin and Ellen won't require the services of a standard wedding singer.



Instead, Kalin's father, Bobby Hatfield — alf of the legendary pop music duo The Righteous Brothers — will perform the ong live at the October 27 nuptials.

"I am looking forward to my son's wedding and feel honored that he has asked me o perform. It will be a pleasure to do the ong at such a special occasion," explained he elder Hatfield by telephone recently rom his home in Newport Beach, California.

First recorded by Hatfield and his fellow Righteous Brother, Bill Medley, 35 years go, "Unchained Melody" became a hit for he second time when it was included on the oundtrack of the 1990 film, "Ghost." Written by renowned film composer Alex North for the 1955 feature, "Unchained," he song has been recorded by many artists ver the years. It is the Righteous Brothers endition, with Hatfield's vocal, that remains lefinitive. Hatfield is pleased, if a bit surprised, by the tune's enduring appeal.

" I feel that the popularity of the song is ust a miracle. I've always loved it, but I never expected the public's reaction to it to e quite this feverish and strong. At our hows, it's mind-boggling to see teenage irls singing right along with the song," ays Hatfield who will join Medley for a Righteous Brother concert Friday evening at the South Shore Music Circus. "It's a great feeling to see a new generation get into our music. It makes you feel real good inside."

Hatfield, 61, has been making audiences feel good since he began performing with his own band while a student at Long Beach State in the early 1960s. Hatfield teamed with "brother" Bill Medley in 1962 when they sang together one night and strong audience response persuaded them to stay together. Not too much later, an appreciative African-American concert goer described the Hatfield/Medley sound as righteous. They have been known as the Righteous Brothers ever since, offering up a a blend of blue-eyed soul and rock 'n roll.

The Righteous Brothers return to the South Shore this weekend with a concert performance at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset

The duo scored their first hit with "Little Latin Lupe Lu." They subsequently joined forces with producer Phil Spector and recorded chart-toppers like "You've Lost That Lovin' Feeling," which was followed by "Just Once In My Life.," "Ebb Tide" and "(You're My) Soul and Inspiration."

"We happen to hit on the right songs. And, of course, 'Lovin' Feeling' was written for us," Hatfield explains of the duo's nearly 40 years in the business. The pair parted company in 1968, but reunited in 1974 and scored another hit with "Rock and Roll Heaven." The song may have put them back on top, but it has never been a favorite of Hatfield's.

"To me that song was always more Osmond Brothers than Righteous Brothers. It wasn't really us, but it became a hit anyway."

Although Hatfield freely acknowledges that the pair no longer has a recording contract, he says that it is just fine by him.

"We love being on the road now, because there is no pressure at this point in our careers. We have nothing to prove. If anyone had ever said in the beginning that we'd still be together 40 years later, I'd have told them to check into a rubber room. But back then, I'd never have thought we would still be having this much fun."

Granitas made simple

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

A granita is nothing more than sugar, water, and lemon juice (and fruit purée for some variations). It is a relatively coarse frozen ice which, instead of being churned in an ice cream machine, is simply placed into the freezer in a shallow pan and then stirred and scraped every 20 minutes or so until it achieves the proper consistency, which can take 2 to 3 hours.

Although simple in concept, it turns out that granitas are relatively complicated and involve a bit of mathematics in order to achieve the perfect balance of sweet and tart and a texture that is icy and on the grainy side of smooth.

The major issue to be decided was sugar content. Recipes I checked ranged from 15 percent sugar concentration by weight up to 25 percent. Further reading turned up research by Harold McGee, the well-known food scientist and author of "On Food and Cooking," who states that anything less than 25 percent severely reduces the 'scoopability' of the dessert.

Since I favored a slightly softer dessert, I tried the higher percentage, 25 percent, which produced the texture I was looking for. The added benefit of this higher proportion of sugar is that the granita can be held overnight and, after a bit of thawing and additional stirring and scraping, can be served the next day. (This cannot be done with most traditional granitas.) It does lose a bit of its freshness in flavor and snap in texture, but it is still quite good.

The next issue was the ratio of lemon juice to water. (I was working on a basic lemon granita first.) After testing, I found the correct balance, the point at which the acidity of the lemon was held in check. In fact, I ended up using only a half cup of lemon juice and sugar to 1 1/2 cups of water. This was surprising, since other recipes use half as much water.

However, it made the granita light and refreshing, rather than a heavy, sweet slush with a bitter undercurrent.

I was keen to find a way to avoid the frequent stirring. In a "Cook's Illustrated" article, it was determined that one could freeze the granita, throw it into a food processor, and then serve it. This worked just fine, although I don't object to the occasional stir if I am going to be in the kitchen for a couple of hoursanyway. The recipe below provides both options. In addition, I found that the window was fairly broad for stirring/scraping, from 15 to 30 minutes, so it didn't matter if one was precise in one's timing.

I also wanted to test the issue of whether a sugar syrup was necessary. (Most older recipes suggest that this is an important step. Sugar and water are heated ahead of time to make a sweet syrup.) However, I discovered that simply stirring sugar into lemon juice and water before freezing worked just fine.

In addition to lemon, I tested other granita flavors and preferred lime, strawberry and pineapple since they have strong flavors.

MASTER RECIPE
FOR GRANITA

A simple lemon granita is probably the best approach for this simply, grainy, refreshing dessert. You could substitute a dry white wine for some of the water but if you use a sweet wine, such as a dessert wine, you would have to cut back on the sugar level to compensate. Champagne works well.

1/2 cup lemon juice (2 to 3 lemons)
1/2 cup granulated sugar
1 1/4 cups water (you may substitute 1/2 cup of dry white wine or champagne for an equal amount of water)

In a large glass measuring cup, combine all ingredients and stir well to dissolve the sugar. (This will take up to 2 minutes.) Pour the mixture into a shallow pan or dish and freeze, stirring once after 45 minutes and every 20 minutes or so thereafter. When done, the mixture will be frozen but slightly mushy, about 2 to 3 hours total.

Serves 3 to 4

FOOD PROCESSOR VARIATION

Simply freeze the granita mixture and then use a food processor to churn it into pieces. This method avoids stirring.

STRAWBERRY VARIATION

Make sure that you are using strawberries that taste as good as they look. Flavorless berries produce a lousy granita.

1 1/2 cups hulled, washed, and halved strawberries
7 tablespoons granulated sugar
2 tablespoons lemon juice
3/4 cup water

Purée the strawberries in a food processor, which should yield about 1 cup of purée. In a large glass measuring cup, combine all ingredients including the strawberry purée and stir well to dissolve the sugar. (This will take up to 2 minutes.) Pour the mixture into a shallow pan or dish and freeze, stirring once after 45 minutes and every 20 minutes or so thereafter. When done, mixture will be frozen a slightly mushy, bout 2 to 3 hours total.

Use variegated foliages for season-long accents

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the month of July draws to a close, our energy and enthusiasm for weeding, mulching and maintaining our landscapes tend to diminish as heat and humidity often prevail. Although the borders are not without their star performers, the riotous colors of spring - and early summer-blooming perennials wane as annual plants take center stage and foliage becomes the predominant player. Plant foliage plays a key role during the earlier intermissions, as well, as nearly all gardens have peak bloom periods interspersed with temporary lulls. The color, texture, and overall appearance of a plant's leaves should be paramount when selecting plant material, as a majority of perennials, trees and shrubs bloom for only a few weeks, while their leaves are likely to be prominent for six months or more.

The increasing demand for new plants in recent years, due to the growing popularity of gardening, has sparked an influx of attractive and often dramatic new cultivars into the nursery trade. Tremendous strides have been made in creating plants whose tinted leaves provide a colorful alternative to our reliance on flowers as more and more gardeners recognize the importance of foliage. Dozens of familiar plants now boast splashy, variegated cultivars with leaves of green, white and yellow. Diverse shimmering, silver-gray plants unify our borders, while dazzling yellows and golds, blues, and handsome, deeply-hued bronze, purple, or burgundy foliages are available to paint a colorful tapestry even when flowers have faded.

Even before I learned to appreciate the importance of foliage, I always gravitated toward plants having variegated leaves, relying on their cheerful countenances to brighten my landscape, especially in those dimly lit, shady corners. Whenever I visit a nursery, these plants seem to send me signals, as if possessed by an irresistible magnetism which beckons to me from afar. Fortunately, I have so many gardens that I have yet to totally saturate my beds with these striped, streaked and blotched plants thereby avoiding the polka-dot effect. It is possible to overdo these multi-colored specimens, thereby reducing or even eliminating their effectiveness in the border.

The term variegation refers to green leaves which exhibit blotches, markings or stripes of another color. Using foliages which are substantially infused with cream, yellow or white in a predominantly green border can really add pizzazz to an otherwise monotonous collection of plants which have finished flowering.

Leaves variegated with white tend to be the most effective for long distance viewing, particularly in the shady garden. White glows in the shade and stands out in the evening garden. A singular clump of white flowers has a tendency to act as a bull's-eye and interrupt the flow of a design, but the subtle touches of white provided by variegated foliage can balance and off-set these white flowers, producing rhythm and contrast to create a refreshing design. Even a solid border of a single variety of variegated hosta along a walkway, or as an edging to a shady garden, adds a crisp and attractive highlight.

In contrast, the strategic positioning of one dramatically variegated plant can also serve as a focal point in the garden or landscape. Variegated woody plants are stunning additions to a lawn or foundation planting. Several ornamental trees are available with boldly-marked foliage including variegated Japanese maples, a silver-edged Norway maple, variegated forms of flowering dogwoods (Corpus florida) and Japanese dogwoods (Corpus kousa), "Silver Cloud" redbud, and a variegated sweet gum, to name only a few.

A diversity of variegated deciduous shrubs can provide equally handsome accents during the growing season. Few shrubs rival the variegated red-twigged dogwood and its equally elegant cousin, the yellow-twigged dogwood for ease of culture and their ability to adapt to a wide variety of soil and light conditions. A single specimen in a shady corner can be seen from afar and provide dramatic spring and summer color with the additional benefit of brightly-colored red or yellow twigs during the colder months. Several hydrangeas, which produce lace-cap blooms, offer attractive foliage including H. "macrophylla Maresii Variegata" and the sensational new H. macrophylla "Lemon Wave", boldly splashed with yellow, white and cream markings. There variegated forms of Weigela, Viburnum, elder berry (Sambucus), Kerria, butterfly bush (Buddleia) and the Daphne. The selection continues to expand yearly as new cultivars are introduced and become available in the trade. My greatest difficulty is finding space to incorporate all these choice new variegated plants into my landscape and to do it without creating a checkerboard pattern.

As these plants are highly sought by many passionate gardeners, it is often necessary to shop early and often at many local nurseries. For the truly variegated plantaholic, a visit to the Variegated Foliage Nursery in Eastford, CT, is a must. Display gardens and the choicest of unusual, multi-colored, streaked and blotched plants are offered. Visit their web site at www.variegatedfoliage.com for more information.

Items for discussion include an improved sidewalk design to provide a safe area for walkers, strollers, runners, and bikers of all ages and abilities; a review of the material options to be used; and an overview of additional amenities such as new railings and pedestrian scale lighting.

If you would like additional information, please contact the CRC office at (781) 383-2449.

Columbine recalled in special concert

Composer Frank Ticheli's "An American Elegy," written in memory of those who died in the tragic Columbine High School Massacre, will be performed by Summer Wind Ensemble (SWE) students at South Shore Conservatory's Summer Music Festival final concert Friday, July 27, at 7 p.m. at the Jane Carr Amphitheater.

The composition, which speaks out against violence in schools, was premiered by Columbine High School students in April of 2000. Summer Wind Ensemble music director Malcolm W. Rowell premiered this piece in Massachusetts this spring at the Massachusetts Southeast District Festival.

"It's a very powerful piece," says Rowell who is now in his 18th season with South Shore Conservatory.

"Bachelor's Lament," was developed based on several traditional folk songs about courting. The composer purposefully developed the piece so that the young musicians would become familiar with the older folk songs in their original context before beginning work on the newer composition.

The concert is free and the public is welcome. Parking for this event is at the Hingham Bus Depot at 19 Fort Hill St., next to Thomas Auto Body. Shuttle buses will transport concert goers to and from the concert.

ALS brings the hospital to the patient

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

In a medical emergency, seconds can make all the difference. And as crucial and important as cardiopulmonary resuscitation and first aid are, sometimes a patient needs a little more.

Until recently in Cohasset, that patient would have received Basic Life Support administered by town EMTs, but would have had to wait as much as 18 minutes for a paramedic unit from South Shore Hospital to meet up with the town ambulance for Advanced Life Support services, such as life-saving drugs.

"We're a portable emergency room," said paramedic Rick Covino. "We can do high-end medicine, and come to you in the shortest amount of time, and people benefit from that."

Sewer board e-mail votes questioned

Did commissioners break the rules?

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Mariner has asked the Norfolk County District Attorney's office to look into a possible Open Meeting Law violation involving apparent deliberations and votes taken by the Cohasset Sewer Commission over e-mail.

Last week's Sewer Commission meeting agenda listed a confirmation of an e-mail vote under its new business.

When questioned this week on the vote, which involved an abatement request made by the Cohasset Historical Society for the Maritime Museum on Elm Street, commission chairman Gary Vanderweil said the board voted via e-mail to expedite the process.

He said the board had originally voted to grant the abatement from having to pay to hookup to the sewer early this year, providing that the society wrote into the deed that the building, which does not have any plumbing, would remain as is. However, town counsel balked at the deal.

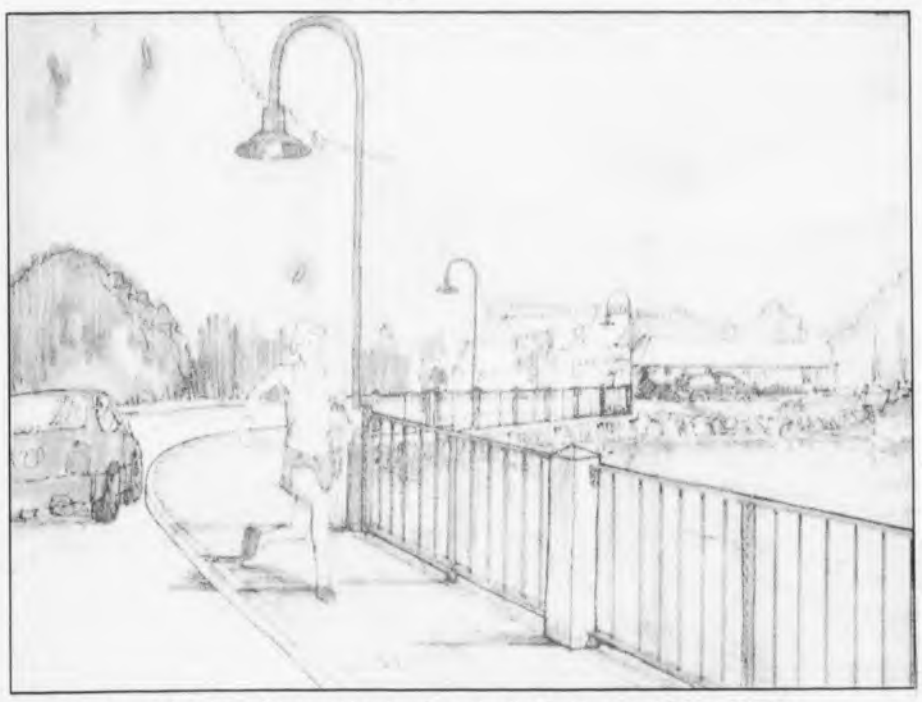
Harbor plans search for theme

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Interested residents liked a "scaled-down" version of the harbor improvement plan and asked engineers to come up with a common theme for the improvements.

The comments came during a public forum held by the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation at the Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island on Tuesday.

The old plan had looked at creating a cantilevered promenade along the waterfront. But CRC Executive Director Dean Rizzo said money and permitting concerns, plus a less than lukewarm reception from the community, had the group's engineering firm, The Cecil Group, reexamine the area.



The new plan calls for a series of simple sidewalks around the harbor, from the town pier on Margin Street, to Government Island, with fencing or railings along the water. It would also create a defined, continuous sidewalk from Kimball's By the Sea, along Border Street, in front of the Olde Salt House and Atlantica, and over the Border Street Bridge.

"We've taken a more scaled down approach," Rizzo told the group of 30 residents gathered in Bancroft Hall.

When asked if they generally liked the changes, a wide-majority of the group verbally responded with a "yes."

Cecil Group engineer David O'Connor used a slide-show presentation to illustrate the possible changes. He proposed slightly widening the road on Margin Street, creating a five-foot sidewalk on the side across from the water, a seven-foot parking lane next to the water,

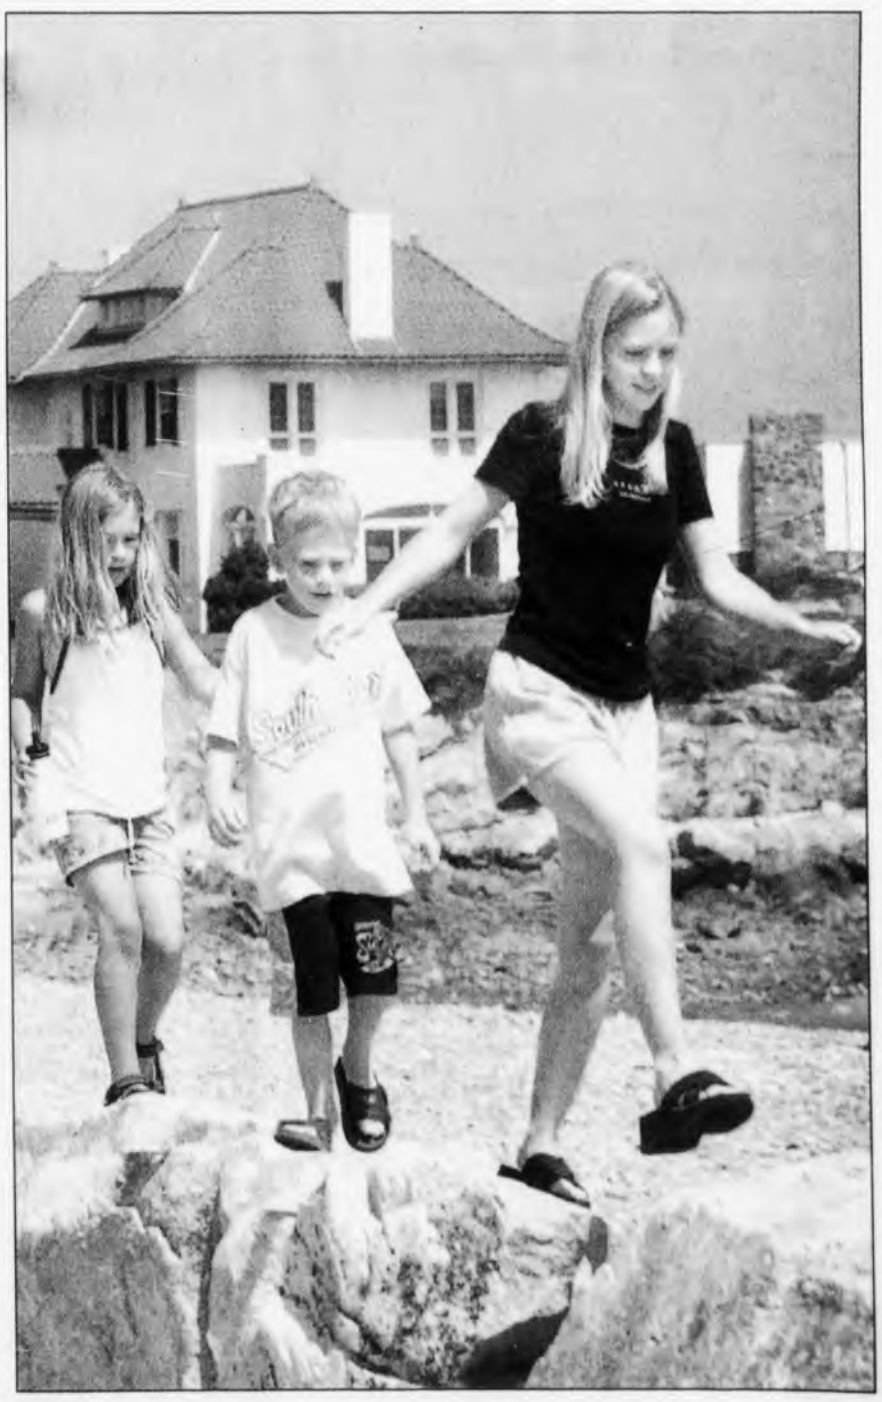
Bill to ban at-grade crossings

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Local legislators, at the behest of a Hingham-based anti-train group, have filed legislation that would prohibit commuter rail lines from being built with at-grade crossings.



Hingham resident John Bewick, founder of Advocates for Transportation Alternatives (AfTA), asked state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, to file the bill earlier this year. State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, also signed on as a sponsor of the bill. Both legislators are against restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line.

Bewick, a former state secretary of environmental affairs, said the safety of residents along the long-dormant rail line "has been sort of neglected" in the recently released final draft of the environmental impact report on the project.

"We've been meeting with people who abut the track on North Street and South Street [in Hingham], and the issue is very scary," Bewick said. "They're just terrified. We had a booth at the recent Hingham Square festival and one woman burst into tears discussing the subject."

Ellen Espenschied of Branford, Conn. will give a recital in the continuing 77th annual series of recitals on the Cohasset Carillon in the tower of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church on Sunday Aug. 5 at 6 p.m.

Printed programs, recital schedules and a brochure describing the Cohasset Carillon will be available in the program stand at the church courtyard on Highland Avenue. Programs will also be distributed on Cohasset Common at the entrance to Stagecoach Way (the pedestrian walk on Main Street, opposite the church). Listeners are invited to bring lawn chairs, blankets and picnic suppers. Following the recital, a tour of the tower and carillon will be offered to all interested persons.

Representatives of the Cecil Group, an urban landscape architectural firm, will present sidewalk improvement ideas for the creation of a safe pedestrian walkway around the perimeter of the harbor. CRC invites you to share your ideas on design elements created to address the demands of today's environment, and preserve the rich maritime history of the waterfront.

Items for discussion include an improved sidewalk design to provide a safe area for walkers, strollers, runners, and bikers of all ages and abilities; a review of the material options to be used; and an overview of additional amenities such as new railings and pedestrian scale lighting.

If you would like additional information, please contact the CRC office at (781) 383-2449.

Columbine recalled in special concert

Composer Frank Ticheli's "An American Elegy," written in memory of those who died in the tragic Columbine High School Massacre, will be performed by Summer Wind Ensemble (SWE) students at South Shore Conservatory's Summer Music Festival final concert Friday, July 27, at 7 p.m. at the Jane Carr Amphitheater.

The composition, which speaks out against violence in schools, was premiered by Columbine High School students in April of 2000. Summer Wind Ensemble music director Malcolm W. Rowell premiered this piece in Massachusetts this spring at the Massachusetts Southeast District Festival.

"It's a very powerful piece," says Rowell who is now in his 18th season with South Shore Conservatory.

"Bachelor's Lament," was developed based on several traditional folk songs about courting. The composer purposefully developed the piece so that the young musicians would become familiar with the older folk songs in their original context before beginning work on the newer composition.

The concert is free and the public is welcome. Parking for this event is at the Hingham Bus Depot at 19 Fort Hill St., next to Thomas Auto Body. Shuttle buses will transport concert goers to and from the concert.

New scheduling system helps fire department

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A newly implemented scheduling method at the Cohasset Fire Department is receiving rave reviews. The department has switched to 24-hour shifts, instead of the old method of varying shift times.

The 24-member fire department is broken up into groups of six, usually with at least one paramedic included.

"We've found it's more accommodating to peoples schedules," said Fire Chief Roger Lincoln.

The 24-member fire department is broken up into groups of six, usually with at least one paramedic included, and works a 24-hour shift. The group then gets the next two days off, followed by another 24-hour shift, two more days off, another 24-hour shift and then four days off.

Before the change went into effect on July 1, the old schedule had the firefighters working two 10-hour days, followed by two 14-hour days, and then two days off.

"Over the course of a year, it still works out to the same 42-hour work week," said Lincoln.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said one reason for the change, which was included in the fire department's recent collective bargaining agreement, was to allow the town's paramedics to work second jobs for private ambulance companies.

"It allows them to hone their skills," he said.

Five of the six paramedics work for private companies.

"They need to do that in order to keep their hand in it and stay current," Lincoln said. "But this job [with the Cohasset Fire Department] is their priority, their full-time job."

The new schedule, along with the hiring of four new positions in the fall of 1999 has helped slash a once exploding overtime budget. The department accrued more than $200,000 in overtime costs in fiscal year 1998, but just $109,244 in the most recent fiscal year which ended June 30. Haddad said the town spent less than $400 in fire department overtime in the week ending July 22.

Lincoln said he is also getting good reviews on the new town ambulance, which was approved at last October's special Town Meeting.

The new ambulance replaced an eight-year-old vehicle that had racked up 100,000 miles during its lifetime serving Cohasset.

Lincoln said the new $110,000 ambulance is smaller than its predecessor, but with the same amount of patient space and that it can better squeeze down some of the long, narrow driveways around town.

He also said the new, lighter ambulance has taken care of another complaint.

"We had heard the ride was very rough for patients and EMTs," he said. "The new one has a van-type chassis that's much more appropriate."

Lincoln thanked the town for both the increased department and new ambulance.

"None of this would have happened without the support of the townspeople, the town manager and selectmen, and we really appreciate it," he said.

care found in a hospital's emergency room.

"Almost everything that can be found being done in an emergency room, paramedics can do," said Covino, who has been a paramedic for 17 years. "But we can do it out in the field in an uncontrolled environment such as a burning car wreck or on the water."

The town's paramedics, part of the fire department, are trained enough medically to quickly recognize a problem, treat it, then stabilize and transport the patient to South Shore Hospital.

"Hopefully, we can provide the same level of care you can get in the emergency room, and that's what the town didn't have before," said Covino.

The movement towards offering ALS service began in 1998, when Town Manager Mark Haddad negotiated with the fire department union to have the next eight people hired be trained paramedics.

"The union has been unbelievably cooperative," Haddad said. "We couldn't have done it without their support."

Two were hired in early 1999 to replace two retiring firefighters, and then four were hired in the fall of 1999 after a special Town Meeting vote allocated the money to expand the fire department to 24 members.

Then Cohasset successfully lobbied the state Department of Public Health for a waiver allowing the town to offer ALS services with six paramedics, instead of the required eight.

"It needed to be signed off by South Shore Hospital, Metropolitan Boston Emergency Council Services [the guiding council of Region IV which includes Cohasset], and state Department of Public Health," said Fire Chief Roger Lincoln. "It was a long, difficult process."

In 2000, Lincoln said the department responded to 783 medical calls in Cohasset, including 123 car accidents, 290 calls that required BLS, and 208 calls that required ALS service from South Shore Hospital paramedics. That burden is now felt by Cohasset paramedics.

"The paramedics are kept very busy, a lot of times they'll work straight through lunch," Lincoln said.

Covino reported back-to-back-to-back calls during last week's heat wave that required ALS services.

"We were out straight," he said.

Covino added that when he gets a call from a Cohasset resident, he knows he's going to be busy. "When people in Cohasset call, they're usually pretty sick," he said. "That can differ from town to town, but here, when people do call for an ambulance, they need it, and we have a good idea we're going to be taking care of somebody."

Since ALS service started on Nov. 21, Covino said having such a high-level of emergency response in town has already paid off.

"I can think of at least 10 good cases where the person was helped out by having us right here in town," he said.

"South Shore Hospital could have been as much as 18 minutes away, and now we're based right here in town, available immediately and that's the difference, those precious minutes," Lincoln said. "The paramedics have stepped up the amount of services offered to the town."

Lincoln hopes to soon bring the number of paramedics on the town payroll up to eight, and help ensure paramedics are on every shift. He may not have to look much further than his own department for the additional help. The town will pick up the course cost of current firefighter/EMTs John Dockray and Jackie Hernan to go back to school this fall and start the training needed to become paramedics.

Covino sat in the back of the town's new ambulance, approved at last fall's special Town Meeting, and went through bag after bag of equipment he has available to him on a call.

One large orange box contains the different medicines he is authorized to administer, such as adrenaline. "These are just about all the same medicines you can find on an emergency room crash cart," said Covino. "We have medicines to speed you up and slow you down."

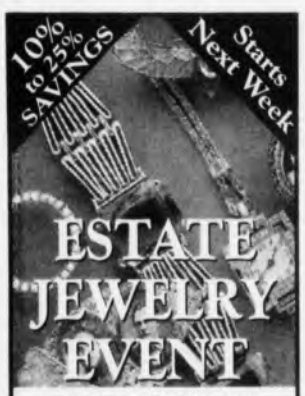
Another rolled-up pouch contains the tubes and tools needed to "intubate" a patient, or place a tube in a person's airway to create an extended trachea.

A giant blue bag contains everything from oxygen tanks to IV bags and is the first thing brought on scene when the paramedic arrives.

A paramedic also can read cardiac rhythms and treat a person's heart accordingly, whether it's with drugs, or with a quick shock from the defibrillator.

But Covino says the success of a paramedic depends on the people first on the scene.

"The job an EMT does is indispensable," he said. "They're essential. If you have a good paramedic crew, there usually is a good EMT crew to make them look good."



"We also still do fight fires," Lincoln added with a smile. "The paramedics are cross-trained to do all jobs. We can move people around, and can be extra flexible."

Frank Mahoney, an EMT and Covino's partner in the ambulance, said paramedics are more than able to help knock down a fire.

"They need to know everything about fire fighting, they need to know how to run every piece of apparatus," he said.

Although the state will review Cohasset's waiver in November, Covino is certain the department will show that the addition of a paramedic unit in a small town like Cohasset is a good one.

"People don't think about the level of care until its being provided to them, and then they want the best level of care possible," he said. "And the level of care depends on if you have good people. The commitment in the department is there. We're always looking for feedback. The guys want to see good things happen here and I think that says a lot."

I want to end this week's column by reminding us all to make sure to thank and recognize all people who are working to make everyone's lives better. Again, I am forced to see how much I have complained about the littlest of things when I am in a bad mood or having a bad day. Lately, it seems as though criticisms are flying whether it is related to public officials, teen-agers, teachers, counselors and more. Although sometimes warranted, most of these complaints are not and we as a society need to work on praise and "constructive criticisms" when needed. For every compliment and positive that someone hears, they have probably heard many more negatives.

Just a thought to keep in the back of our heads for the week.... Have a great one! Send in all your news and photos to me at...

OPINION

Tax law comes of age

It's hard to believe but an entire generation of Massachusetts residents have been born since Proposition 2-1/2 became law some 20 years ago.

Those future homeowners could take the property-tax cap legislation for granted because they won't have known life any differently.

So as 2-1/2 comes of age, we think it's a good time to turn the clock back to the mid- to late-1970s, when Massachusetts was known as "Taxachusetts" and important industries and jobs were headed south to warmer climes and friendlier tax policy.

A taxpayer rebellion had been boiling just below the surface for some time when Citizens for Limited Taxation took the ball and ran with it. The grassroots group garnered enough signatures to get the tax-limitation question put on the November 1980 state ballot — on that same ballot Republicans Ronald Reagan and George Bush challenged President Jimmy Carter and Vice President Walter Mondale for the keys to the White House. The rest, to coin a phrase, is history.

Today, some 20 years later, taxes have still gone up but clearly not at the same soaring rate they would have without the law.

However, under 2-1/2, for taxes to increase beyond allowed limits — the people have to be asked permission. Voters must approve "overriding" the 2-1/2 tax cap at the polls. This can be a cumbersome task and oftentimes, the resulting debate pits interest groups such as parents of schoolchildren and senior citizens against one another. But nevertheless, we think Prop. 2-1/2 is a good thing because it makes government fiscally accountable.

We also think, as citizens and homeowners, it is crucial that we understand Prop. 2-1/2 is not an enemy to government but a control mechanism.

Barbara Anderson, executive director of Citizens for Limited Taxation, puts it best.

"Before Prop. 2-1/2, government thought it was entitled to just take instead of ask," she says.

For many of us, a large portion of our hard-earned dollars pay for the privilege of living in our town. So it's incumbent on us to understand the laws that govern our property taxes, so we can make a fair determination when an override or debt exclusion is needed.

Olde fashioned picnic basket auction

The Cohasset Historical Society announces an "Olde Fashioned Picnic Basket Auction," fundraising event, Sept. 8 at 1 p.m. at the Lothrop House at 14 Summer St.

Bring a creative picnic lunch for two to be auctioned off to the highest bidder. Then join the festivities by successfully bidding on and enjoying the picnic lunch of your choice. Suggestions include:

- In addition to lunch, customize your basket with an enticing extra, such as gift certificates, lottery tickets, free lessons, specialty items. The more creative the basket, the bigger the donation to the historical society.
- Basket essentials: appetizers/soup, sandwiches, munchies (veggies, chips), salad (pasta, Caesar, fruit), dessert, disposable utensils, dishes, napkins.
- Attach a note to the outside of your basket. Specify your basket's menu items and any special features so that the auctioneer can "sell" its virtues to the audience.
- Bring a blanket or lawn chair.
- Beverages will be provided by the society.

Don't forget, this is a fund-raiser — the more attractive the basket, the higher the bidding will go.

For reservations and information, call Tam Elliott, 781-383-2169; Barbara Elliott, 781-383-1154; or Kathy O'Malley, 781-383-9765.

Village thoughts are clarified

TO THE EDITOR:

I was surprised to read your story on the village revitalization and see a boxed quote from me indicating that I didn't think price was the main concern with these proposals. Please allow me to clarify my thoughts on the revitalization of the Cohasset village and to thank the residents who have spent so much time and energy tackling these issues.

Let's go back to the beginning with the formation of a private group known as the CRC. Many of us were pleased by the proposal to spruce up the village area and perhaps address some safety concerns with the infusion of private funds. However, that concept has gone far afield. We are now looking at multi-million dollar proposals for changes that we don't need and there has even been some discussion that taxpayer money or Greenbush-related mitigation grants be used to implement these plans.

What happened to the offer to spruce up the village with private funds? That should be where we start. Some sprucing up and some cleaning up will accomplish a lot. It is true that sidewalks need attention, lighting needs improvement, etc. I suggest some flowers and a park bench or two will enhance the village area. These need not be big-ticket items. The CRC should let the town know if they still intend to finance these improvements, and if so, how much they will contribute. These need not be million-dollar fixes.

Safety, primarily of pedestrians, has been another focus of these efforts. We have found that, for the most part, things such as parking, the traffic flow and pedestrian access works pretty well as is. Nonetheless, there are some areas that need attention. I support making the simplest, least-expensive changes first. Let's see how they work before we examine more comprehensive plans. Angled parking spaces might be limited to smaller cars on a trial basis to find more space for pedestrians, before a decision is made to remove ledge. Those, like myself who drive vans and SUVs, might have more limited parking options, but that is preferable to changes that are permanent and expensive.

Since the village revitalization efforts were first begun we have seen not only the rebuilding of the Red Lion Inn, but a business in every storefront. Hopefully, through the continued efforts of the village task force and the CRC, that progress will continue. I was, however, shocked by the price tag attached to the package submitted to the selectmen last week for proposed village improvements. I hope that before any public monies are spent on "beautification" that we first address more pressing needs in the community, such as master planning and adequate police/fire facilities that provide minimum decent working conditions for those personnel.

On another note, it was my hope last week that the local press would help jump-start an "Adopt a Public Area Program," through which individuals and groups could continue to clean up, plant and tend public areas. Residents should let us know what areas are presently being cared for, and also if there is any area that they are interested in adopting. We are already enjoying the efforts of many, and I would like to see a more formalized program take off in Cohasset.

Repaving sought

TO THE EDITOR:

Mark Haddad
Town Manager
41 Highland Ave.

My name is Aisling Guinee and I am 12-years-old. I live on Surry Drive here in town. I will be entering seventh grade in September. I have been living in Cohasset for nine years and on Surry Drive for four years.

I have noticed that with the few harsh winters that we have endured recently that our street has been left very cracked and difficult to ride on. The town has tried to patch the very bad parts on our street, yet it has only made things worse.

I was wondering if Surry Drive was on your list for repaving the streets? If so, could you please tell me when you are expected to start the paving process? I can be reached at the numbers above. Thank you for your attention in this matter.

Aisling Guinee
Surry Drive

Dear Miss Guinee:

I am in receipt of your letter dated July 12, 2001 requesting that Surry Drive be repaved due to its worsening condition. I appreciate you taking the time to bring this matter to my attention.

Please be advised that I have discussed this request with the DPW Superintendent, Harold Litchfield, and both of us agree that this road should be repaved. Therefore, we will be placing an article on the Fall Town Meeting Warrant requesting the necessary funds to complete the project. Should the article be approved, you can expect Surry Drive to be repaved either this fall or early next spring.

It is nice to know that someone your age has taken the time to bring this issue to the town's attention. I hope you always take an active role in your community. Please feel free to contact me with any other questions or concerns.

Mutual respect missing between youths, police

TO THE EDITOR:

Recent editorials in the Cohasset Mariner have discussed the issue of the current relationship between Cohasset's teenagers and the Cohasset Police Department. This is an issue that has often been discussed amongst myself and friends while growing up in Cohasset and it was actually very interesting to finally have someone step up to the plate and publicly present their take on the issue (letters written by Noria Morales and the Ernsts). It was equally refreshing to read the Police Department's response.

But sadly the issue appears to be no closer to a resolution as communication between both parties has led to an apparent increased bitterness between the two contending sides. To resolve a conflict of opinions such as this each party must give and take, however this conflict appears to be stubbornly rooted in a bitter, stagnant stand-off.

My name is Andrew Ross. I'm only 20 years old so yes, this letter is written under the burden and misconceptions of youth. That I will gladly admit. However, I also grew up in Cohasset and although never arrested (thanks to a little luck and occasionally some swift running) many of my friends have been, and so I feel that, although young, I have some experience in witnessing the relationship between our town's finest and our town's youth.

Let me begin by stating that there is really nothing to do in this town at night between the ages of 16 and 21. I cannot begin to count the number of times I've had to ask my friends what in the world are we going to do tonight. I tell you there is only so many times a man can enter Blockbuster before going crazy (I think my family's video count is close to a thousand) and before long one seeks alternative activities after hours. The Cohasset-500 (being out "driving around" with apparently no direct goal) is not an enjoyable activity but what else can be done? I guess one could go to the Teen Center and hang out with kids 5 or 6 years younger then you. But no wait, that would be painstakingly humiliating and I doubt you'd be too popular with your contemporary peers (and we all know how important your friends are in high school). Perhaps I could go into Boston and see a show. Wait no, you generally have to be at least 18 to go to clubs and that's generally expensive and out-of-the-way. But really what else is there to do legally in town once the sun goes down? The answer is absolutely nothing.

You see the root of the problem is that there is nothing to do when you're my age and younger in Cohasset. If I weren't playing music in a band right now and keeping myself busy through practicing and playing music I can't describe to you the boredom that would overtake me this summer. In fact, going to the beach and having a few beers or heading over to the town pool after hours

Selected swimming ban on Bassing Beach

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Because of high enterococci bacteria counts, the Board of Health has issued a limited ban on swimming at Bassing Beach. The ban will take effect immediately after a rain event of 0.5 inches or more and will continue for 48 hours. Signs to this effect will be posted at selected locations on Bassing Beach near the opening of Bailey's creek, at the Sailing Club and on Government Island. The harbor master will be notified when rain exceeds the 0.5inch level.

The reason for this action, closing the beach after rain, is that it is after such a rain event that measurements of bacteria levels reach their highest levels, and generally exceed safe swimming standards. The levels have been increasing at the mouth of Bailey's creek for some time, probably because of the high bacteria levels being found in the ditch behind the homes on Parker Avenue. Several of these homes may have poorly functioning septic systems and a sewer hookup to homes on Parker Avenue, which should improve the problem, has been delayed.

We believe that the contamination is local and is mediated by tidal flushing, and hence represents only a minimal risk, but one of the popular ways to get to Bassing Beach is to swim across at the mouth of Bailey's creek.

The levels have been increasing at the mouth of Bailey's creek for some time.

Mercury spill kits

The town has received mercury spill kits. These are available to residents to recover mercury which has been accidentally spilled. Such as from a broken mercury thermometer or light or thermostat switch. The kits are available at the Public Health Nurse Office or Board of Health at Town Hall, the Police and Fire Station and at the Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF). Mercury affects the human brain, spinal cord, kidneys and liver. There is so much mercury pollution that the State has issued a warning about eating certain types of fish. Mercury gives off a vapor which can be harmful in minute concentrations. If you have broken a thermometer or suspect a spill, here's what to do:

- Don't touch the Mercury
- Never vacuum it up. It will contaminate your vacuum cleaner, and the motor will heat the mercury causing it to vaporize. Also, don't sweep it up.
- Obtain a spill kit from the above locations and follow the instructions which are in the Kit. If you can't get a spill kit, here are some tips on home cleanup. Try to disturb the mercury as little as possible as any movement causes mercury vapors to be released.

Different surfaces require different clean up procedures.

On a hard surface or tightly woven fabric use stiff paper to push beads of mercury together. Use the eyedropper to suction the beads of mercury, or working over the tray to catch any spills, lift the beads of mercury with the stiff paper. Carefully place the mercury in a wide-mouth container. Pick up any remaining beads of mercury with sticky tape and place contaminated tape in a plastic bag along with the eyedropper, stiff paper, and gloves. Label the bag as mercury waste. Place this bag and sealed container in the second bag. Label it as mercury waste and take it to the RTF for disposal.

On a carpet or rug, the mercury-contaminated section should be cut out. This cutout section, along with all cleanup items, should be placed in a plastic bag. Label it as mercury waste and take it to the RTF for disposal

In a sink of water mercury will fall to the bottom. Remove as much water without disturbing the mercury and recover the mercury with an eyedropper. Place in a wide mouth container, close the lid and seal it with tape. Label it as mercury waste and take it to the RTF for disposal.

In a drain, mercury will get caught in your sink trap. Working over a tray, remove the trap and pour the contents into large mouth container. Close the container lid and seal with tape. Label it as mercury waste and call your State agency for appropriate disposal.

Big Dig and Great Bore

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

They called it "the Great Bore," and it was like "the Big Dig" in more ways than just the cute nickname.

The year was 1854 and railroads were springing up in Massachusetts like dot.coms in the '90s only with a greater chance of permanence.

The Western Railroad had a virtual monopoly on rail traffic over the central route from Worcester west to New York State and the Troy & Greenfield Railroad figured it should have the same chance over the northern route.

The Western had gotten its start with a $2.1 million loan at 5 per cent interest from the state and not only had paid back the loan but was making money hand over fist and the T & G was ready, willing and eager to do the same.

Arming itself with the finest lobbyist of his day, P. P. F. DeGrand, the T & G went to the Great and General Court of Massachusetts demanding the same treatment. What could a legislator do but give them a $2 million loan, too.

The problem was that before the lucrative trips to the bank could begin, the T & G had to dig a four and three-quarter mile tunnel through Hoosac Mountain in the Berkshires in order to reach the New York state line.

Isn't that the way we've always done it in Massachusetts?

Now $2 million went a long way in the mid-19th century but not far enough for the T & G. By 1861, the road was bankrupt and the state took over the half-finished project in order to protect its investment.

The state protected its investment all right, only nobody protected the investment from the state. By the time the tunnel was completed in 1875, nearly 20 years after it was begun, the cost had risen to a point somewhere between $10 million and $20 million, no one was exactly sure and, eight years later, the state was still paying off the bonds.

Can you see now why I was not too excited when I learned that the cost of the Big Dig, which started out at $2.3 billion in 1984, reached $14.4 billion last week?

Isn't that the way we've always done it in Massachusetts?

How many of you remember the construction of the UMass-Boston campus on Columbia Point in Dorchester in 1971?

That was the time when the New York consulting firm of McKee, Berger & Mansueto got a $6 million contract, double the estimate, and Sens. Joseph DiCarlo and Ronald McKenzie went to jail over a $40,000 bribe.

And construction of the garage under Boston Common in 1956 when money exchanged hands in the awarding of the contract and George Brady, the first chairman of the Massachusetts Parking Authority, went into the slam. Brady, incidentally, was a former newspaperman. Once the best and the brightest fail you, who can you trust?

(I am indebted to Connie Dalton, a former colleague at the Boston Herald-Traveler, for the story of the Troy & Greenfield Railroad, which appears in his definitive history of the Massachusetts Legislature, "Leading the Way.)

Master plan or misplan?

NATURAL VIEW

JIM SHIBSKY

Cohasset has begun a master-planning process that may guide us toward a promising new future. Or maybe not. I suspect it will merely rubber-stamp the status quo. That would waste a rare opportunity and a lot of funding. These chances don't come often — Cohasset's last master plan was done in 1961.

The first of four public comment sessions was held last Thursday, July 26, at the Beechwood Church. Six non-committee members attended. Six. Pathetic. Don't you people care about what happens to this town? Haven't you noticed the air in Cohasset is too toxic to breathe more days every year? Haven't you noticed developers dynamiting Cohasset's irreplaceable rock ledge to put up ticky-tacky trophy houses? Beautiful old trees senselessly chain-sawed down? More asphalt. More gas-guzzling, air-fouling cars clogging the asphalt? More big-box stores? Haven't you noticed Cohasset beginning to resemble Nowhere, USA?

I think people's ideas about town planning are confined to a tiny box. The walls of the box look something like this: We should continue building single-family detached houses, because this is what people want, and it's the best of all possible lifestyles. The box excludes knowledge of the great environmental damage these houses cause and go on causing. We should continue driving cars, building more parking space and more highways. We should continue burning fossil fuels for heating and generating electricity. The box offers no alternatives.

But global climate change has reared its ugly head and is peeking into the box. People are beginning to realize we and our current town planning are the cause of the problem. Cohasset houses and cars generate a hefty tonnage of greenhouse gases. If we keep building the same kinds of houses that squander energy and require the same kind of driving, global climate change will worsen. We need to rear our collective heads and peek outside the box.

Haven't you noticed Cohasset beginning to resemble Nowhere, USA?

What else can we do? How else can Cohasset develop? What should we be working toward?

Clean Air. We can ask the planning process to measure how much air pollution Cohasset now produces, and tell us, please, how much is sustainable? This is basic information we all need to know. What would it take for Cohasset to sign the Kyoto Accords?

Clean Water. Clean water means being able to go to a stream and, bending down, drink the water from cupped hands. Imagine that! But now our water is poisoned with acid rain, toxic chemicals, and bacteria. The planning process can inform us about our watershed and tell us what steps to take to have clean water.

Clean Houses. We need houses which don't pollute; which don't consume more energy than they produce. The planning process can measure the energy use of existing houses and inform us of sustainable options.

Renewable Energy. The planning process can guide us toward non-polluting, renewable energy. It can show us how Cohasset buildings can be heated with solar energy and powered by electricity from photovoltaic panels. No burning of fossil fuels; no generation of greenhouse gases. (A first step might be to require all construction in Cohasset to meet Energy Star standards.)

No Cars. Are there attractive ways people can live close enough to the places they need to reach daily that they can simply walk or bike to them? Is there any way Cohasset residents can work in Cohasset? What alternatives to gas-guzzling cars are possible?

Clean Public Transit. Planning can tell us what alternatives there are to heavy diesel trains, and guide us in a regional perspective. The transportation box needs to be bigger than Cohasset alone.

Cohasset Restored. Can Cohasset tract developments be removed and natural ecosystems restored? The planning process can guide us in the direction of greening our town, or allowing it to continue browning.

Nature Connection. The planning process can tell us how a Cohasset of the future might look if it were planned as if non-human life forms mattered. It can introduce the concept of humans regaining their long-lost personal connections to this planet we live on.

True Community. The planning process can illuminate for us the degree to which Cohasset has been planned for privacy, to the detriment of true community. Why not have both? The process can present alternatives built in recent years.

I want to encourage readers to attend at least one of the upcoming public comment sessions. Get your thoughts out of that deadly little box. Let yourself imagine a sustainable Cohasset and South Shore, and offer your vision and ideas to the planning committee. There will be neighborhood meetings the next three Thursday evenings. See elsewhere in this issue for times and locations. The committee wants your input. I'd love you to prove me wrong about rubber-stamping the status quo.

Increased density and controlled growth in Cohasset

MASTER PLAN

CLARK BREWER

Many believe that the answer to Cohasset's future growth and development concerns is to not have any growth or development. The Town's slow growth has been remarkable. Cohasset is as near perfect a Town as can be found, with rugged natural beauty, an abundance of open space and well cared for homes. So don't change thing, it works. This is a valid perspective but at the same time, there is enormous pressure to develop land for people wanting new and good places to live or raise a family.

The current Zoning Bylaws and the Zoning District Map pre-determines "as of right" development possibilities. This is the nuts and bolts of what can be done and where. Zoning has been adopted and has been modified over the years at Town Meeting. I believe that all residents and business owners have some investment in any Zoning Bylaw changes.

Increased density is one way to encourage controlled growth. Special zoning districts can be established in mixed-use settings. This model, if considered, requires meticulous planning and zoning changes to make it work.

The Residential Cluster Development District in the present Zoning Bylaw is an opportunity for development that preserves open space and can create diverse housing. A 10-acre minimum site is required. At that size and in a "Residence A" Zoning district the maximum number of dwelling units of 24. The site analysis includes identification of all trees with an eight-inch diameter.

The intent of this district is carefully considered and worded in the purpose section:

- To encourage the more efficient use of land in harmony with its natural features.
- To encourage creativity in the design of developments through a carefully controlled process.
- To encourage a less sprawling form of development, a shorter network of streets and utilities, more economical development of land with less consumption of open space.
- To permanently preserve natural topography and wooded areas within development areas and to preserve usable open space and recreation facilities close to homes.
- To provide an efficient procedure to ensure appropriate high quality design and site planning to enhance the neighborhoods in which they occur and to the Town as a whole.
- To promote diverse and energy efficient housing at a variety of costs.

The large parcel minimum encourages development in the most remote and inaccessible parts of Town. I believe, runs counter to the intent of this high-density model. The implementation section of the Master Plan may incorporate suggested changes to this development model in order the intended purpose to be realized.

The term "sustainable development" was first in used in the late 1970s. This became mainstream by the World Commission on Environment and Development in 1987. Sustainable development was adopted as "development that the meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs."

Clark Brewer is an architect and vice-chairman of the growth and development committee.

Color — not always bright and beautiful

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

A wide variety of colors, often brilliant and beautiful, occur in birds. Alcids, a group of seabirds, are almost totally black and white, except for some red or orange on the bills and feet of some species. The coloration of some shorebirds is so cryptic that they are completely camouflaged as they sit still in their preferred habitat. It is not only birders who can see and appreciate bright colors, but most birds have color vision as well. It is thought that birds which are active at night, such as owls, are colorblind.

Some colors are due to pigments; some are due to structure. There are three types of pigments: melanins, carotenoids and porphyrins. Melanins are the most common and are tiny granules synthesized by the birds themselves. These pigments show up in the skin and feathers and produce dark colors such as blacks, browns, grays, and dull reds. Carotenoids must be eaten, are fat-soluble, and produce reds, oranges and yellows. The variability in the coloration of House Finches is due to the variability in their diets. The more brightly colored males have redder feathers because of eating a carotenoid-rich diet. These are the birds which females find more attractive. Porphyrins are less common and are fluorescent under ultra-violet light.

Structure is responsible for blues, whites and iridescence. A Blue Jay's feathers are not blue at all. They look blue because the structure of the feather allows only the blue wavelengths to be reflected. Their feathers include a transparent layer on top of a middle layer of air pockets (vacuoles) over a third layer of melanin. When light shines through the feather structure, the melanin layer absorbs all wavelengths except blue. The blue light is scattered by the vacuoles, which is reflected back out. If you soak a Blue Jay's feather in alcohol until there is no air in the vacuoles, the feathers will look black instead of blue.

A Blue Jay's feathers are not blue at all. They look blue because the structure of the feather allows only the blue wavelengths to be reflected.

Feathers structured to reflect all wavelengths look white. Iridescence is also due to structure, namely irregular barbules in feathers that interfere with the reflection of light waves. This accounts for the "now you see it, now you don't" characteristic of iridescent colors. Hummingbirds, grackles, and starlings all exhibit iridescence.

Usually males are more brightly colored than the females in species where the sexes do not look alike. Color can play an important role during courtship. The duller female is more likely to be the one sitting on the nest, not wanting to attract predators with bright colors. Distraction coloration refers to small, often white, "bannermarks" that show up as a bird takes flight. These may help to distract a predator briefly, giving the fleeing bird a slight advantage. Examples of these are the white tail spots of the robin, the outer white tail feathers of the junco, and the white rump patch of the flicker.

Abnormal coloration sometimes appears in birds. Albinism is the absence of pigment, turning feathers white instead of their usual color. Partially albino birds have only some white feathers. Complete albinos not only have for a refreshing, private swim are the sort of creative ideas that tend to come to mind when nothing else will. Necessity is the mother of ingenuity.

But I contend that us young people are not the only bored people in town. Cohasset is not Colophon and I feel that there is a strong possibility that the local police may also be searching for things to do after 10. Or, dare I say it, looking for people, probably young people, who are out "causing trouble". I have numerous tales of woe from friends who've described being pulled over for no apparent reason other then it was late and they looked young. I was once pulled over on 3A for driving while drinking a coke. He just wanted to make sure it wasn't alcohol.

I found it hard to believe, almost to the point of absurdity that Nick Mincolla and Luke Caldwell were recently pulled over for an expired inspection sticker and a "loud muffler." Was the car pulled over initially because of a loud muffler or because of the inspection sticker? And were the two men really searched because of their inspection sticker and a faulty muffler? I don't know about the rest of my friends but I'm going to make sure my muffler works before I head out again.

Another example is officers walking quite literally several miles into Wheelwright Park to find a few unfortunate, bored young folk gathered around a small fire sharing a couple cold ones and a few laughs. Isn't that a little bit out of the way from the usual patrol route? Everyone my age has many stories like these (Noria Morales' brother's is especially upsetting) and after a while one has to wonder at the department's definition of "patrol".

And from the other corner of the ring are the officers and they make just as many valid points. Officer Quigley wrote an excellent article this week that I feel deserves to be responded to (my primary reason for writing this). First of all, I think the police do a great job around town. I think most teens would agree with me. Yet the conflict remains. Why is there so much bitterness between both groups? I don't hear about other small towns having this problem. Why is there such conflict? I feel the problem lies with the way the police handle the situations they come across. Regardless of what happens, as many teens are brought in as possible. Usually, and commendably on the part of the police, those arrested are given lenient treatment and required to go through the usual DARE or MADD programs etc...However, is it necessary to arrest a designated driver for minor in transport when he was doing a great service for his friends that night by driving them safely around?

If it were me that was arrested I tell you that's the last time I would volunteer to drive. If I'm gonna get arrested I might as well have been drinking. That is a great way to discourage responsible driving. It is the drunk drivers that should be arrested (and occasionally are thanks to our police force), not the sober ones. If one wants to build quality, positive relationships with young people bringing a teen back home to his or her angry parents instead of to the station might be a better way to do that. By doing so the teenager would respect you much more for giving them a break and maybe even think twice about having to put you out and "forcing" you to arrest them if you caught them drinking again. This pro-active solution would let teenagers respect the police more for giving them a break here and there (instead of appearing Hell-bent on getting their prints downtown) and might help to curb their behavior voluntarily. In fact, if teenagers had a better relationship with the police you might even get a few of them to join the "Citizen's Police Academy", but don't hold your breath.

Anyway, this article wasn't intended to put down the police in any way. They do a good job here. It's just that when it comes to Cohasset's youth it is as if they look hard for a reason to bring teens in. I don't know if this problem can ever be solved but it can be controlled if the relationship between police and teens is made more positive and I feel the best way to do that is to have the police lighten up a bit while patrolling (this doesn't mean ignoring blatant illegal acts) and to find something for teens to do on a Friday night besides hit up the local video store. Teens are never going to give up testing the limits of the law, especially when it comes to drinking and trying to socialize after school.

If we want to ease the inevitable conflict that arises from those who test the laws and those who enforce them we have to respect each-other more and try and recognize where both sides are coming from. Teenagers need to respect police and understand their duties to enforce the law and police officers need to recognize that teenagers will always be testing their limits and that they need a certain degree of understanding and privacy, something which cannot be found even deep in the woods or along private beaches.

Didn't anyone on the force ever drink too many beers once, or break the law on occasion, or get with the wrong girl here or there or somewhere along the way while growing up? I'm sure they did but did they get arrested for it and then find themselves put on public display in the local town paper? That I can only conjecture at but I hope one day soon the police will regard Cohasset's teenagers with less suspicion and that Cohasset's teenagers will regard the police with a little more respect. Perhaps one will beget the other until at least a mutual understanding can be reached.

Until that day I will have to drive around town under the veil of suspicion that I am used to having grown up here. And of course I'd better check and make sure my muffler isn't too loud.

Don't blame police

TO THE EDITOR:

This letter is being written in response to Ms. Morales' letter to Selectman Merle Brown in the July 26 Mariner. Her brother was a designated driver, was arrested after a run-in with police at Sandy Beach on June 22. The kid was with his friends who were drinking. Police showed up, as they regularly do, and after finding liquor around the teen's car, all four were arrested and charged with "minor in possession" and "minor transporting alcohol." This case is not one that is shrouded in ambiguity, as she would like us to believe, but rather, it is a clear-cut case of a kid making a bad judgment call. The fact that he was the designated driver does not play into the situation at all; it does little to change the fact that he transported alcohol to the beach and was in possession of alcohol as it was in/around his car.

For Ms. Morales to first say that because the teen was from Hull, and had dreadlocks, [these] were the reasons for his arrest is absurd. Furthermore, to address her claim that "if this was Cohasset kids, they would have simply got a slap on the wrist" is again, utterly ridiculous. In fact, three Cohasset teens were arrested in the early morning of that same day for alcohol charges. Also, might I remind you that last year, 21 Cohasset kids were arrested in one night. This is not a case of the Cohasset Police Department discriminating against a kid from Hull because of a school sports rivalry; it is not the Cohasset Police Department's dislike of dreadlocks that led to an arrest. It is a case of someone getting caught breaking the law and being arrested for it.

What is probably the most disturbing part of this letter is the fact that Ms. Morales is looking to blame someone else for the mistake her brother made. The police officer was doing his job. He had every right to arrest the teen and made the right decision in doing so. As seems to be the case lately, everyone is looking to blame someone else for what they do wrong. I'm not saying that I'm the best kid or that I wouldn't be upset if I was in his shoes, but I also accept responsibility for my actions. Ms. Morales, your brother chose to drive his friends and the alcohol to Sand Beach. He allowed them to drink it in and around his vehicle. He got caught. Don't try to blame anyone, especially the town's police force or the selectmen for a clear-cut case of your brother breaking the law.

Jan. 31 deadline for central sewer hookups

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Residents living within the Central Cohasset sewer district have until Jan. 31 to hook up to the system, the town Sewer Commission voted Thursday.

The commission hadn't previously set a formal deadline for hookups, although it had hoped to have a majority of residents on-line by the fall. However, between ongoing connections in North Cohasset as well as Central Cohasset, residents have had trouble lining up contractors to do the work.

Paul Davis, of Rosano-Davis, said his company has been swamped with requests to connect town residents to the town sewer systems.

Work on the Central Cohasset system finished last fall, and residents were told to hook up as soon as possible. North Cohasset residents have a deadline of Aug. 31to hook-up, but the commission said it would entertain extension requests. Sewer Commission chairman Gary Vanderweil said North Cohasset residents having trouble getting a contractor to do the work should contact the Sewer Commission office in town hall.

Vanderweil said about 200 homes in Central Cohasset were already online from the original system, and about 170 homes have come on-line since work finished last fall. However, approximately 500 homes have yet to hook-up to the Central Cohasset system. Close to 800 homes will be serviced by the system when all are on line.

Davis said his company has had two crews out doing connections. He said the work takes just a day or two to complete, depending on the house. Since most septic systems are located in the back of the house, homeowners have to first hire a plumber to reroute the plumbing to the front of the house. Davis estimated the average cost of a hookup to be between $2,000 and $3,000.

The sewer commission said it currently has no plans to institute penalties if residents don't connect by the deadline, but members are nervous about possible state sanctions. The North and Central Cohasset sewer projects were the result of a lawsuit the state filed against the town over pollution from residents' septic systems. The state had originally ordered the project be completed by June 2000.

voice vote at the meeting."

He said it had been two or three meetings since the commission had given the society a tentative approval, and used the e-mail vote to be able to prepare the paperwork declining the society's abatement request.

"That's why we confirmed the vote in a public meeting so we could give the notification as soon as possible," he said.

This may not be the only incidence of the sewer commission voting by e-mail. A copy of the approved minutes from its June 5 meeting said "Abatement requests for I.D. # 86 & 89 were inadvertently omitted from the abatement package voted on. They were voted on by e-mail the week following the meeting, which vote is hereby certified."

Sewer Commission Vice-Chairman Ray Kasperowicz said he is familiar with the state's Open Meeting Law and doesn't think the commission violated any laws.

He said Vanderweil had drafted a document regarding the historical society abatement request and sent it to the board "to see if we had any problem with his wording."

Kasperowicz said the vote wasn't "an official vote," and that a formal vote didn't take place until the board's meeting Thursday.

"It was going to be up for discussion, and it was a preliminary handout," he said. "The only thing done by e-mail was to fax it in draft form and see if we had any problem with it before he presented it at the meeting."

The state's Open Meeting Law states, "No quorum of a governmental body shall meet in private for the purpose for deciding on or deliberating toward a decision on any matter except as provided in this section" and lists the reasons for executive sessions.

A representative from Norfolk County District Attorney William R. Keating's office said the agency will take a serious look at the matter. Although Norfolk County has no specific guidelines surrounding e-mail and its use under the Open Meeting Law — the Middlesex County District Attorney's Office has issued advisory guidelines.

That office said, while boards can use e-mail for "certain housekeeping matters" such as the scheduling of a meeting, or agenda items, "both boards and governmental bodies and town employees, however, must take care not to utilize such communications to poll board members and otherwise engage in deliberations."

"The advent of e-mail has opened new doors of possible abuse with the ability to easily transmit documents back and forth," said Mary Ford, editor of the Cohasset Mariner. "We feel this is something that local governments should look at, and we hope the district attorney's office takes a hard-line stance to prevent abuse.

"As a newspaper it's our job to be the governmental watchdog, and that's why we filed a complaint with the district attorney."

Harbor plans search for theme

and crosswalk from the sidewalk to the town pier. The sidewalk would cross Elm Street by Kimball's, and wind around on the outside of the hotel, as well as Veteran's Memorial Park. O'Connor said he loved the rosebush lined path along the park and wanted to keep it in the plan.

A photo showing the common sight of cars parked along Border Street blocking the walking path drew a chuckle from those in attendance. The new plan would create a 5-foot, 6-inch wide raised sidewalk along Border Street, with granite curbing, and a seven-foot wide parking lane, while keeping two lanes of traffic.

O'Connor said the narrow road might have to be widened a foot or two in some spots, but would be within the town's easement. However, the group has not completed final engineering surveys.

The sidewalk would continue in front of the Olde Salt House and Atlantica Restaurant, and up to the Mill River Railway. The road then narrows from 28 feet at that point to 24 feet on the Border Street Bridge. But O'Connor hopes to be able to widen the road in front of the Lobster Pound enough to continue the sidewalk, and switch the sidewalk on the Border Street Bridge to the harbor side. He proposed a wooden walkway from Border Street to Government Island by the Harbormaster's shack, over a rocky ledge.

The bridge, a popular spot for area youth to jump into the Gulf River, became a source of contention. Most residents were apprehensive about moving the sidewalk to the opposite side of the road. Even though jumping from the bridge is illegal, residents still feel the town should provide some sort of safe area on the side of the road to keep the youths out of the street.

The new sidewalks would have also street lamps and the Captain's Walk historical markers built in along the fence or railing.

Rizzo said with the general concept agreed upon, the next task was to conduct official surveys, and come up with a detailed plan.

Althea Stamp said whatever is done should be done with an eye towards the future.

"It needs to last 50 to 100 years, not just look good for 10 or 20," she said. "It needs to still be special in 100 years."

Bob Deutsch said an important step was to come up with a collective theme for any improvements made.

"Ultimately that's what you as a town will have to decide," O'Connor said about a theme. "Right now we're talking about the broad technical aspects, where the sidewalk is, how wide it will be. The rest of it needs the broad input of the town."

He showed a sampling of different materials the sidewalks could be made of, such as concrete, brick, and paving tiles, and a wide range of railing styles.

Steven Cecil, a principal of the Cecil Group, said for safety and liability reasons, the current fence along Border Street would have to be replaced. Safety standards require a fence or railing 48-inches high and with no space wider than six inches.

Cecil said the town traditionally is "not highly decorative" and that whatever is done would be "very simple and very straight." He though the gray and white colors work well in the area.

O'Connor said looking at the harbor he saw a "working harbor" and any changes should be made with that in mind.

Rizzo said a lot of the work can be done without burying the utility lines, but ideally it should be included in the plans.

A few members of the crowd asked the Cecil Group to help lead the discussion around a common "theme" for the harbor improvements. The group said it could bring in different sections of railings and lighting around the harbor as a demonstration.

Bill to ban at-grade crossings

crossings, one of the highest amounts in the country.

The bill would ban the use of a commuter train with at-grade crossings — tracks that run across a road at street level. Trains would instead run in shallow-cut culverts, tunnels or raised viaduct.

"I came from Newton, and the Green Line in Newton is all below grade, you don't even notice there's a train," he said. "The commuter rail along the Mass Pike is below grade as well."

Bewick pointed out that there's an accident every 3.3 million train miles traveled, and the two other branches of the Old Colony Line have had five fatalities in less than four years of operation.

Because it was filed after the December deadline for new legislation, the bill is sitting in the Senate Joint Rules Committee waiting to be assigned to a committee.

The bill's chances for survival are slim. House Transportation Committee Chairman Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree, is a prime backer of the train — but Bewick hopes it will increase awareness of some of the safety concerns associated with the train.

"People just aren't used to a train coming down the tracks," he said. "It's almost unprecedented in the country to introduce such a dramatic new hazard with so many families with small children along the tracks."

Hedlund pointed out that the federal tram authority is attempting to eliminate construction of trains with at-grade crossings.

"Greenbush flies in the face of what they're trying to do," he said.

Hearing request falls on deaf ears

By Michael Marotta
MMAROTTA@CNC.COM

A last ditch effort is being made by officials in towns along the Greenbush rail corridor to hold a public hearing with MBTA officials before the comment period on the $408 million rail project's Final Environmental Impact Report (FEIR) ends Aug. 10.

Selectmen from Scituate, Braintree, Cohasset and Hingham as well as members of the Weymouth Town Council have petitioned state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand and Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan, for the meeting, but have yet to hear a response.

On July 31, Senator Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth) wrote a letter to both Durand and asking for the hearing. At press time, Hedlund said he had not heard back from either state official and was not optimistic about staging a public hearing in front of T officials.

"(The MBTA) are concerned that it would turn into a forum for anti-Greenbush activists."
— Senator Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth

"The response is that they are very concerned about doing it," Hedlund said. "They are concerned that it would turn into a forum for anti-Greenbush activists. The transportation people's focus is from a public relations standpoint and not to allow this to be used as a forum to generate bad press for the project."

Scituate Selectman Joseph Norton said if the MBTA is confident with the FEIR, they should have no problem giving residents an opportunity to voice their concerns.

"If you don't have anything to be bashed about, then you don't have anything to worry about," Norton said.

Norton said that it was "highly unusual" not to hold a public hearing for such a large project and it was "somewhat mystifying" that T officials have not responded to the towns' request.

"Historically, there's always been a public forum for any project of this magnitude," Norton said. "This affects a lot of people one way or the other and I hope the secretary would go along with out request."

In a the letter sent to Durand and Sullivan, Hedlund wrote that the Citizens Advisory Committee has found the FEIR "inadequate."

"The local communities," Hedlund wrote, "who have the knowledge of local conditions important in considering mitigation measures for the project, have not had an opportunity to be heard on the FEIR issues."

About a month ago, the Citizens Advisory Committee received word that a public forum would not be held before the Aug. 10 deadline for public comment on the FEIR. That spurred the town boards and local politicians into action.

"You have to consider that there was more public comment submitted in writing on this project early on during the draft EIR than the entire Big Dig project has received," Hedlund said. "So a significant amount of public concern has been expressed which warrants the opportunity for citizens to verbally make their case in addition to making it in writing in the presence of state officials."

Cohasset Heights ordered to clean-up dumping violation

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The state Department of Environmental Protection has ordered Cohasset Heights Limited to include a provision to clean up 2,600 tons of illegally dumped waste, in its closure plan.

CHL, which stopped serving as an active landfill in the spring of 1998, was cited by Robert Egan, the town zoning officer, in January of that year for dumping waste outside of its permitted area. CHL was ordered to remove the illegally dumped waste or face a fine of $100 a day. However, the waste still sits there, the subject of one of a number of lawsuits between CHL and the town. The fine was never enforced.

"As the zoning officer I wrote the letter and then the lawyers took over," Egan said this week.

The DEP order was included in a letter sent to CHL owner Paul Barry asking for more information regarding the site's closure and capping plan, specifically, the engineering plans and methods and materials to be used. The state agency also said the area Barry has already capped has to be recapped and included in the closure plan currently before DEP. It also asked for a current topographic survey showing the existing condition of the site, and a detailed plan describing the construction of a gas venting system already in place.

Barry's lawyer, Michelle O'Brien, of Moehrke, Mackie and Shea said she didn't want to comment on the letter, but was pleased to see negotiations with DEP moving forward.

"I don't think we can comment right now on whether we think the information requests are reasonable or unreasonable, that's all part of the process working towards closing and capping the landfill," she said. "We're just pleased DEP is taking the plan up again and are hoping to work with them towards getting a final closure plan."

The letter, dated July 19, was the first comment made on the closure plan since DEP met with CHL engineers on Sept. 28, 2000.

Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE) member John McNabb, also a Cohasset water commissioner, called DEP's inclusion of the illegally dumped waste cleanup-in the closure plan "terrific news."

The town order to clean up the half-acre of illegally dumped waste was appealed first to the Zoning Board of Appeals in April, 1998, and then to the state Land Court in Feb. 1999, which has made no decision.

O'Brien said CHL is working with the town and DEP for permission to keep the waste where it is. The area, denoted as Area IV-B, is lined.

"Frankly it doesn't make a lot of sense to reopen the landfill just to move the waste," she said.

CHL is currently entangled in four different lawsuits with the town.

Earlier this year, the Conservation Commission ruled that CHL would also need to file the closure plan with them.

Color — not always bright and beautiful

totally white plumage, but also have pink eyes, legs and bills, because of the lack of color in those body parts as well. Leucism refers to paler than normal birds. The photograph shows a white Eastern Phoebe, which is ordinarily an all gray bird. It still has its dark eye, so it is either a partially albino bird, or a leucistic one. Melanism is a condition of more than usual melanins, resulting in a darker than usual bird.

Some birds, such as the Eastern Screech-Owl, have more than one color phase within the same species. Color phases have nothing to do with age, sex, or season. They are just different, in the same way that some people have red hair and some have brown hair. Red phase owls do not turn into gray phase owls.

In some species, males and females look alike. Others are sexually dimorphic, meaning that the males and females have different plumages. There are also seasonally dimorphic birds that go through seasonal molts for the purpose of camouflage. A prime example of this is the ptarmigan which is white in the winter to blend in with the snow-covered ground, and is brown in the summer when the snow has melted. Many small songbirds molt into bright colored plumages for the breeding season and molt back into more drab colors for the winter. Some birds accomplish this plumage change, not through molt, but through wearing down the tips of their feathers.

Bright colors are beautiful to look at. Birds with all black plumage display elegance. Cryptic coloration presents a challenge to those looking for the bird. Abnormal coloration adds a different challenge, requiring us to depend on shape, size, voice and behavior for identification. Plumage changes keep us on our toes as we learn to identify some of the most colorful animals of our world.

Joanne Norton is a licensed bird-bander, avid birder, and a member of the Hingham Water Resources Task Force.

Artist of the month

Cohasset resident Patricia O'Neill is currently featured as artist the month at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. O'Neill's artistic history began seven years ago studying watercolor painting extensively with Virginia Avery of Marshfield, Tom Roche of Ireland and well-known South Shore artist, Roz Farbush.

In her artist's statement, O'Neill says, "Painting with watercolors is fascinating and fun, frustrating and familiar at the same time. Painting landscapes is an adventure that can take you anywhere. When the muse is upon you, you have the world in your hands as well as your paintbrush."

O'Neill has had showings across the South Shore and abroad at the Milton Art Museum, and in Clonmellon Art Gallery, Clonmellon, Ireland. She is affiliated with the South Shore Art Center, Braintree Art Association and the Aisling Gallery in Hingham.

These wonderful and colorful watercolors, depicting the lush Irish landscape and other natural scenarios, are on display until the end of August at the library. Come in and enjoy.

POLICE BRIEFS

Clubs stolen from golf club pro shop

Upwards of 40 golf clubs including 30 drivers and 12 wedges were taken during a burglary at the Cohasset Golf Club in the middle of the night of July 26.

Police think the burglars used rocks to break a window to get inside the pro shop. The alarm company notified emergency dispatch of a possible break-in in progress and Officers John Small and James McClean went to the scene at about 1:40 a.m.

Police said the glass on the locked, pro-shop door was shattered. A rock was also found on the pro shop floor, as well as outside on the pro shop rear deck.

McLean, joined by Officer Garrett Hunt, searched the immediate area but were unable to find the suspect or suspects. During the search, the pro shop manager arrived and discovered numerous golf clubs were missing.

The burglary is still under investigation. Anyone with information, should call the police at 781-383-1055.

Republicans wish senator a happy 40th birthday

Party also revs up volunteers for 'Hedlund's Army'

By Rick Collins

Just seven months after his being sworn in for a fifth term as state senator, supporters of Bob Hedlund used his 40th birthday as an excuse to kick off his fundraising campaign for the November 2002 election Sunday at Hingham's South Shore Country Club.

"We all know how Bob hates celebrating his birthday, so we turned it into a fundraiser," said Kathy Stacy who spoke "in proxy" of party organizer Polly Logan, who was hospitalized last week. "We need to build another army to go out and fight."

More than 100 local Republicans attended the event made bipartisan by a sprinkling of Democrats in the room, including former state senator Paul Harold of Quincy, who mentored Hedlund when he was first elected in 1990.

Jeff Granatino, who lost to Hedlund in the 1990 Republican primary and later served as his chief of staff, said he was "shocked" to hear he would be celebrating his birthday.

"I've only run unopposed once, in 1998, and that was the greatest year of my life."

— State Sen. Robert Hedlund

"Bob celebrating his birthday is like him rooting against the Phillies," Granatino said of Hedlund, a fan of the Philadelphia Phillies baseball team.

The country club function room featured a Phillies balloon, as well as pictures of a young Hedlund with his sister, Heather, playing softball, and as a baby-faced, 29-year-old, sans goatee, celebrating his 1990 win.

"I heard Polly Logan said, if there's another birthday party, the goatee has to go," said Granatino to applause. "There'd be no better recuperative treatment than to send her a picture of him without the goatee."

Logan, the grand dame of South Shore republican politics and parties, was hospitalized last week with heart problems, and is recovering from surgery at Massachusetts General Hospital. Hingham Republican Town Committee Chairman Jim Claypoole asked the group to "deluge" the hospital mailroom with get-well cards for Logan.

Hedlund took his turn at the microphone to set the record straight that he doesn't hate celebrating his birthday, instead, as with New Year's Eve, just doesn't get too "excited" over the day.

He also had his uncle and two other gentlemen – each with goatees – stand up and said, "Now don't they look distinguished?"

Hedlund compared the decision to have a birthday party thrown in his honor to when former British Prime Minister Winston Churchill traveled to Yorktown, Va., for a celebration of the American Revolution.

"He said, 'I'll be there, but I won't be celebrating.'" Hedlund said with a smile.

He called the birthday party "a shameless way to capitalize on raising some campaign funds."

Hedlund also said he has the distinction of being the only state senator with an announced opponent for the 2002 state election. Jim Cantwell of Weymouth, whom Hedlund defeated last November, has already made it known he will run again for Hedlund's seat.

"I've only run unopposed once, in 1998, and that was the greatest year of my life," Hedlund said.

An avid softball player, Hedlund compared his campaign team to his championship softball teams. "We won because we did the fundamentals. We've done it without mercenaries and without paid consultants," he said to the gathering, many of whom has worked on his campaigns.

"You've heard of Arnie's Army, the group of people that would follow golfer Arnold Palmer around? Well you're Hedlund's Army," he said.

Fechter, Beal and Goldstein ride for a cure

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Bob Beal has a small divot on each arm that he figures are there for the duration of what should be a full, rich life. To the 37-year-old Scituate resident, however, these are scars he values deeply, representing as they do his role in extending the life of others who do not share his shake of good fortune.

Five years ago, Beal was talked into donating platelets to the Jimmy Fund for young cancer patients by long-time friend Michael Fechter, of Cohasset—or, more specifically, Michael's wife, Linda, a public relations coordina-

Cohasset baseball star basks in glory of championship season with B.C. High

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The state champion B.C. High baseball team was top heavy with seniors this season — six of whom will play Div. 1 college ball next season and a seventh, Scituate's Mike Conroy, who will jump right to the pros after being selected 43rd overall in last month's Major League Baseball draft by the Cleveland Indians.

One junior from this bunch, however —Cohasset's Greg Smith — still managed to distinguish himself enough to be named to the Catholic Conference All-Star team ahead of three of his Division 1 bound teammates.

"Those guys hitting ahead of me were just incredible. They were getting on all the time, forcing pitchers to throw to me, and that's why I racked up pretty good RBI numbers. That had a lot to do with me being named (an All-Star)."

Cohasset's Greg Smith, on his B.C. High teammates

The lefty hitting and fielding Smith finished among the team leaders in hitting (.419) and RBI (26 this season) for the 25-4 Eagles, adding a pair of home runs. And yet the 16-year-old seemed embarrassed by the fact that he edged out teammates for post-season honors.

"Those guys hitting ahead of me were just incredible," said Smith, who generally hit seventh in the Eagles batting order. "They were getting on all the time, forcing pitchers to throw to me, and that's why I racked up pretty good RBI numbers. That had a lot to do with me being named (an All-Star)."

And that was simply the cherry on top of what was a dream campaign for the lifelong Cohasset resident and former perennial Little League All-Star.

"It was just unbelievable to be a part of something like that this season," said Smith, who attended Cohasset schools through the eighth grade. "We had so much talent and so many players come up big when needed. I can't describe how great it felt."

Although he has another year ahead of him, Smith is already look-

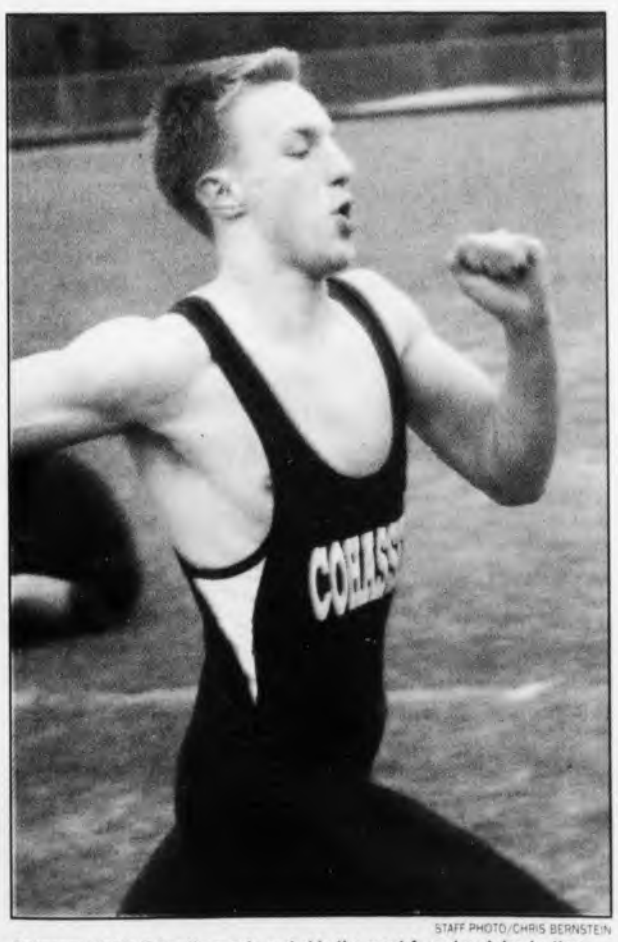
Krupczak going... but not forgotten

Cohasset track/football star heads off to college

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT



With another school year gone by, another wave of CHS student athletes will be heading from little Cohasset to bigger and better competition in college. One of those students is Brian Krupczak.

Krupczak was probably the most feared and dominating sprinter in Class D Massachusetts this past spring. This being his senior year, the area's coaches had learned to honor his abilities, often not wasting their best sprinters against Krupczak in the 200.

"It was really fun," recalled Krupczak, when asked about this respect bestowed upon him. "It was great that all the hard work paid off."

Many who have heard tales of Krupczak's vaunted work ethic no doubt suspect hyperbole. Those who know him best will tell you this is not the case. The truth is there are almost no high school athletes in the weight room as often as, working as hard, or striving to improve them-

Mariner All-Scholastic girls lacrosse team

Cohasset's Sheerin named among area's elite

Junior Kristi n Sheerin was a rock solid lock for this team from the word go.

There were several other Cohasset High girls who received strong consideration for this team. After all, as the 9-6-1 record indicates— Sheeri n had plenty of help.

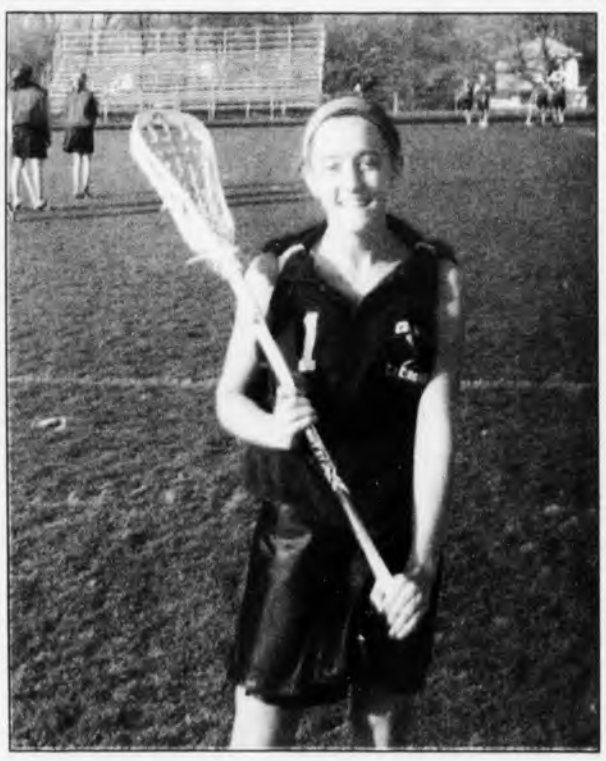
Honorable Mentions Julie Lordan, Katherine Coyne and team goalie Gia Petrakis, all sophomores, proved a formidable defensive front, keeping the Lady Skippers in several games this season, while a fourth Honorable Mention from Cohasset, Maura McKenney, was a key fixture in the middle of the field.

As is always the case with these kinds of things, however, there were several difficult choices that had to be made. Several of the young women you see here as with "Honorable Mention" recognition were seriously considered for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

These are the choices we made for our 2001 All-Scholastic girls lacrosse team:

Kristin Sheerin - Junior (Capt.)
Midfield - Cohasset

Kristin Sheerin



A two time Mariner All-Scholastic in 2001, Kristin also made our All-Scholastic Gymnastic team...the leading scorer for the Lady Skippers lax squad this spring for the third season in a row, with 58 goals and 10 assists...A Pilgrim Conference All-Star for the second year in a row...despite her small frame, plays extremely tough, as attested to by her team best total on ground ball pickups...endurance and explosive speed help set her apart... is already being recruited for gymnastics, but if she winds up at a Div. 3 college, says she'd like to play lacrosse as well, whether interscholastically or as a club sport...competed this weekend at national Junior Olympics Gymnastics Championships in Virginia Beach...was the overall champion in Pilgrim Conference 2 gymnastics this winter, and holds the majority of Cohasset High's gymnastics records...trains at the Ellis School of Gymnastics in Braintree...Cohasset girls lacrosse Coach Kathy Gadiano: "Kristin is really something to watch out there. She does it all for us. When we need a big play or a big goal, she's the one we look to."

Bridget Driscoll - Junior
Third man - Hingham

Bridget Driscoll

Selected as a first-team All-American this season, Driscoll's work in the defensive midfield helped Hingham clinch the State Championship...A Pilgrim Conference All-star two years running, Driscoll anchored the Harborwomen's impressive defense, but also provided some offense, scoring six goals and six assists...Ranked second in her junior class, Driscoll maintains a 4.0 GPA at Hingham High, where she serves as secretary of the National Honor Society...Driscoll plays soccer in the fall and basketball in the winter and will serve as captain of both teams next year...Driscoll was a recipient of the Harvard Book Award and is making her second appearance on a Mariner All-Scholastic team as she made our basketball squad last winter...Her summer will be spent playing AAU basketball and playing summer league lacrosse...Driscoll will captain next year's team with fellow All-Scholastic Meaghan Marshall.

Cohasset's Kristin Sheerin was a one person wrecking crew for the Lady Skippers this spring, leading them in scoring (58 goals, 10 assists) out of a midfield position.

Meaghan Marshall - Junior
Third home - Hingham

Meaghan Marshall

No doubt one of the most dominating attackers in the state, Marshall's tenacious offensive techniques led Hingham to a State Championship this season...Still just a junior, Marshall continued her impressive career at third home as Hingham's leading scorer with 72 goals and 43 assists this season...Career stats find Marshall with 159 goals and 81...Marshall is a two-time Pilgrim Conference Plus League All-star and was an honorable mention for All-American this year...Marshall had multiple goals in the Harborwomen's historic 9-7 win over nemesis Needham in the South Sectional finals, and in the 12-10 win over North champ Winchester in the State Championship...Also a talented guard on the HHS basketball team, Marshall was selected as an honorable mention to the Mariner All-Scholastic basketball squad...She will no doubt return as one of the best attackers in the state next year and will captain the Harborwomen team with fellow All-Scholastic Bridget Driscoll.

tor with the Jimmy Fund.

Beal admits today that he wasn't crazy about the process of having blood drawn (who is, after all) but did so at the appeal of Linda, who was helping to organize a platelet drive at that time. That was his first of 40 or so donations.

"Having blood drawn isn't exactly my favorite thing in the world, but when I went in there (on that initial visit) and read some of the stories they had available about the kids and saw some of the pictures of them with the bald heads...well, it just occurred to me what a small sacrifice it really was," said Beal, who has been married for two years and does not yet have children.

Platelets for those who don't know, are cytoplasmic bodies in the blood which promote clotting. Cancer patients often stop producing these life-essential elements.

The process of removing platelets from a donor involves drawing blood from one arm and passing it through a centrifuge which filters out the platelets. The stripped blood is then re-deposited back in to the donor's other arm. The process takes approximately an hour and a half, but is no where near as physically draining as donating whole blood.

"If you think about it, you're not really giving up much," continued Beal. "Healthy bodies just produce more platelets."

Beal will be donating another of part of himself this weekend when he, Michael Fechter and another friend, Jeff Goldstein of Cohasset, team to make the 192-mile trek by bicycle from Sturbridge to Provincetown in the annual Pan-Massachusetts Challenge to raise money and awareness for the Jimmy Fund.

Beal and Fechter's friendship dates back to their days working together at State Street Bank in Boston. Goldstein and his wife have become friendly with the Fechters through various activities involving their children. Both couples have two young children approximately the same age.

Beal, 37, has been racing competitively on the mountain bike circuit for the last several years, so his personal perception on this ride in itself is "just for fun".

Goldstein, 40, is a running enthusiast who has participated in two New York City Marathons. He also used to bicycle quite a bit during his college days.

Fechter, the youngest of the trio at 35, is also the relative novice when it comes to "serious" physical fitness. He keeps himself in shape but, as near as he can recall, up until this past April when he began his training for the PMC, it had been close to 20 years since he'd last been on a bicycle for anything more than a brief jaunt.

"This was something I thought a lot about doing this year, so as soon as the weather got warm I pulled the bike out and I've been riding regularly ever since," said Fechter. "At this point, I feel pretty confident going in to the ride."

Fechter, a vice president at State Street Research, has been setting his alarm clock for the pre-daybreak hours two or three times a week over the last three months in order to pedal 10 to 15 "hard miles" before work.

Goldstein and Beal have established similar weekday regimens. The real heavy duty road work, though, takes place on the weekends. Over the last few months, the threesome has steadily increased the distance of their Sunday rides. Last weekend, the three pedaled from Cohasset to the Bourne Bridge and back with a few circuitous detours to push the total to the 100-mile mark.

This is approximately the distance these three — along with all others who've agreed to tackle the longest of the five available Pan-Mass rides — will be doing on the first leg of their ride this Saturday. Riders are scheduled to begin the first leg of their journey, 108 miles from Sturbridge to Buzzards Bay, at 6 a.m.. They will then all bunk for the night at the Mass Maritime Academy on Buzzards Bay.

The local trio's goal for this leg, according to Beal, is to make it in under six hours.

The next morning, all of the riders will cross the Bourne Bridge together at the beginning of the 84-mile anchor leg that will take them all the way down Route 6 to Ptown. Goldstein figures this home stretch will take around five hours, given the lingering wear and tear from day 1.

"We probably won't be as energetic after riding 100 miles and then bunking, but it should be a nice ride down the Cape," said Goldstein, who first became involved with the Jimmy Fund and the Dana Farber Institute four years ago when a close friend, Patty Stone, who has since passed away, was diagnosed with breast cancer.

It was while sitting in the waiting room while Patty received treatment that Goldstein started to read some of the literature there regarding the Jimmy Fund. It was at about this same time that his first child was born. It was not long thereafter these two life-altering experiences that he joined the Jimmy Fund's .406 Club, thereby committing to personally contribute a large sum over a five-year period for cancer research — a goal on which he is now closing.

"I thought of how lucky I was to have a healthy child, especially in comparison with what those families (of children with cancer) were going through, and I just felt this was something I had to do," said Goldstein, who has also performed the annual stair climb at 60 State St. in Boston and the Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk.

The three riders are hoping to raise a total of $10,000. Tax deductible donations can be made by sending a check to the PMC/Jimmy Fund at 77 Fourth Ave, Needham MA, 02494- rider # MF0064.

The simple yet fundamental question was put to all three riders: "Why the PMC?" Certainly, I probed, there are less grueling means for raising the kind of money you will be working on this weekend. All three had similar answers, with Fechter perhaps summing it up best.

"We're raising money, but I think we're also celebrating the fact that we're all healthy and happy," said Fechter, who has had a few people close to him diagnosed with cancer, among them Linda's uncle, recently diagnosed with brain cancer.

"This does hit home," he continued. "You can't take health and happiness for granted. We're the lucky ones. You think about what some of these families with children stricken with cancer must go through, and you just thank God your kids are healthy."

PHYSICAL EXAMINATIONS

Prior to the start of the season, each student must have had a physical examination performed by a physician within the previous 365 days. A student is not eligible to participate if he or she has not had a physical examination within the previous year. Students who have the exam performed by their own family physician must provide a note signed by their physician clearing them to participate in sports.

ELIGIBILITY

All student athletes must adhere to the eligibility rules outlined in the CHS Athletic Department Student Behavior Code. At the start of each season, the student-athlete and a parent or guardian must sign the Student Behavior Code Agreement, which applies to all eligibility rules regarding academics, chemical health, attendance, age and all MIAA and South Shore League rules. All players, coaches and parents are expected to represent Cohasset High School as good citizens who display good sportsmanship at all times.

USER FEES

The Cohasset School Committee has established a user fee of $75 for the first sport, $75 for the second sport, and $50 for the third sport, per athlete, for a total of $200 per year if a student participates in three different sports. These funds will be utilized to offset the reductions in the athletic budget.

In order for a student to participate in a sport, the entire user fee must be received on or before the first day of practice; no exceptions will be made. This fee, which is non-refundable (after the first game), does not guarantee that a student receive equal playing time during each game of his/her selected sport. If this fee poses an unusual hardship for any student's family, the parent/guardian should call either the principal or athletic director so that arrangements can be made for the student(s) to participate. Payment should be by check, made payable to Cohasset High School.

INSURANCE

All members of interscholastic teams representing Cohasset High School are covered by special athletic insurance. This insurance is "non-duplicating"; it is intended to provide coverage for expenses in excess of any personal or family coverage, but within limitations of the policy.

For questions or concerns, call Ron Ford, Cohasset Middle/Senior High School athletic director, 781-383-6103 or e-mail: rford@chs.ssec.org.

Robby McCunney, a 9-year old Cohasset Little League All-Star, posted a phenomenal pitching performance. In 35 innings, he allowed only two hits, one run and five walks while notching 95 strikeouts. During one stretch of the season, he hurled 27 consecutive hitless, scoreless inning.

Harbor Island Triathlon

On August 19 the Harbor Islands Triathlon will take place in Hull.

A half-mile ocean swim from George's Island to Pemberton Point will be followed by a 8.5 mile bike race from Hull Gut to the War Memorial and bandstand followed by a 6. 2 mile run from the High School to the War Memorial and along Hull Bay finishing at Hull High School. The event begins at 10:00 AM from George's Island with all participants arriving at Pemberton Point by 9:00 AM.

ing ahead to the possibility of playing at the next level. He has played in several showcase tourneys, including one earlier two weeks ago at Dodds Stadium in Norwich, Conn. — the home of the (boo) Yankees AA affiliate Norwich Navigators — in front of scouts from dozens of colleges.

There's still the possibility that with a monster senior campaign, the 6-foot-1 first baseman could travel the same path as Conroy, choosing between college and professional ball. However, Smith sounds as if he's trying hard not to get caught up in that fantasy.

"Sure, playing pro ball is always in the back of your mind, but right now I'd just consider myself lucky if baseball can help get me into a good college," said Smith. "I think it's best if that's what I focus on."

Given his busy schedule, Smith was only able to play in three of the Cohasset Legion team's 20 games this season. He missed the first half dozen or so tilts due to the state high school tourney. After that, it was the showcase tourneys and other obligations (such as the weeklong Appalachia Community Project) that interfered.

"It's been hard for Greg not to play in those (legion) games with a lot of the kids he grew up with," said Greg's mother, Pearl Smith. "But you only get so many opportunities to impress college scouts. He knows how important it is to try to take advantage of this."

Marshfield coach Sue Collins: "She's a very strong defensive player and was instrumental in keeping our games close. She's clearly our most aggressive player and will leave a big hole in our defense. She was a nice team leader. She led by example. We'll definitely feel the loss."

You know you can count on her to come up with the saves we need, and when she's really on she can come up with one big save after another. She kept us in a lot of games this year. She really stays in the game mentally and communicates well with her defenders, which is key for a goalie. There are still parts of the games she's learning, but she made a lot of improvement this year, and I'm expecting even more next year."

Nicole Evans - Junior
Center Midfield - Scituate

Nicole Evans

The leading playmaker and most complete member of the Scituate High squad…finished junior year with 34 goals and a remarkable team high 28 assists… SHS's career points leader with 62 goals and 45 assists… Pilgrim Conference All-Star…the daughter of Scituate coach Paula Evans…possesses excellent stick skills, stamina and knowledge of the game…competed in second straight Bay State Games last month, playing for Southeast team that won the Silver Medal… plays lacrosse year round, going indoors with several of her S.H.S. teammates at the Canton Sports Dome in the fall and winter…ranks among the top 60 in her class with a 3.3 GPA… would like to play lacrosse in college, and is participating in several showcase tourneys this summer, including upcoming event in Lake Placid always well attended by college scouts…has already received letters from coaches at Canisisus and UVM…is leaning towards a Liberal Arts major…runs track at SHS in the winter and works out at Exceleration Sports Training in Norwell…Scituate Coach Paula Evans: "Nicole is a very unselfish player, sometimes maybe even a little too unselfish. Elizabeth Ghilardi - Junior (Capt.)
Attack - Norwell

Elizabeth Ghilardi

And she deserved to be. She's not only the most talented player on the team, but she's probably the hardest working one too. She's always the first one on the field and the last one off it. She just loves the game and that comes across all the time."

Meghan Dwyer - Junior
Goalie - Norwell

Meghan Dwyer

Coach Jen Kent called Dwyer "the main reason" for the Lady Clippers remarkable feat of qualifying for the state tourney in their first season of varsity play this spring…has been the starting goalie for the Norwell High team since her freshman year, the team competing in JV play only the previous two seasons…saved 71 percent of the shots she faced this season…athletic and well rounded goalie…a Pilgrim Conference All-Star…backstopped silver medal effort at Bay State Games for southeast squad… hopes to play lacrosse in college at a Div. 2 or 3 school…has attended several lacrosse camps this summer, including a highly acclaimed goalie camp this past week at Milton Academy… also plays varsity soccer…a member of the National Honors Society…plays cello for the Southeastern Philharmonic Orchestra…sings for Norwell High's acappella musical group "The Decibells" made up of Norwell … Norwell coach Jen Kent: "I can honestly say Meghan was the main reason we made it to the state tourney. She just defends the net so well. It's scary to think where we would have been without her. She makes good decisions on when to come out with the ball and when to pass it. She also does a nice job of helping her defenders out, letting them know where to go."

Casey Logan - Junior
Attack - Scituate

Casey Logan

The leading scorer for the Lady Sailors this season with 54 goals and 11 assists…competed in second straight Bay State Games last month, playing for Southeast team that won the Silver Medal… good stick skills, strong moves and a quick shot make her deadly around the net…scored most of her goals early in the season, faking out defenders and goalies alike on drives to the net… plays lacrosse year round, going indoors with several of her S.H.S. teammates at the Canton Sports Dome in the fall and winter… would like to play lacrosse in college, and is participating in several showcase tourneys this summer, including upcoming event in Lake Placid always well attended by college scouts…has also run cross country and played basketball ant Scituate High…an Honor Roll student… Scituate Coach Paula Evans: "Casey has a knack for getting her shots off against pressure. Cohasset track/football star heads off to college selves as much as Krupczak does during the off-season.

"I feel I can always push myself to improve," said Krupczak, who spent most days last winter working with Cohasset High School utility coach Mark Hall.

Krupczak also wanted to thank his track coaches, Al LaFountain, as well as Hall.

With all the lifting he does, in addition to the extended work Krupczak completes with plyometric blocks, he still feels there are some technique problems he has, such as getting his knees higher when striding.

His technique is something he looks forward to improving upon when he heads into his freshman year at Washington and Lee University in Virginia, a school of only 2,000 students, but one with a very impressive track and field program.

Washington and Lee is a Div. 3 school, which is what Krupczak wanted: a highly competitive program where he would flourish. His best times in the 200 meter race might even land him a spot in the D3 nationals next year.

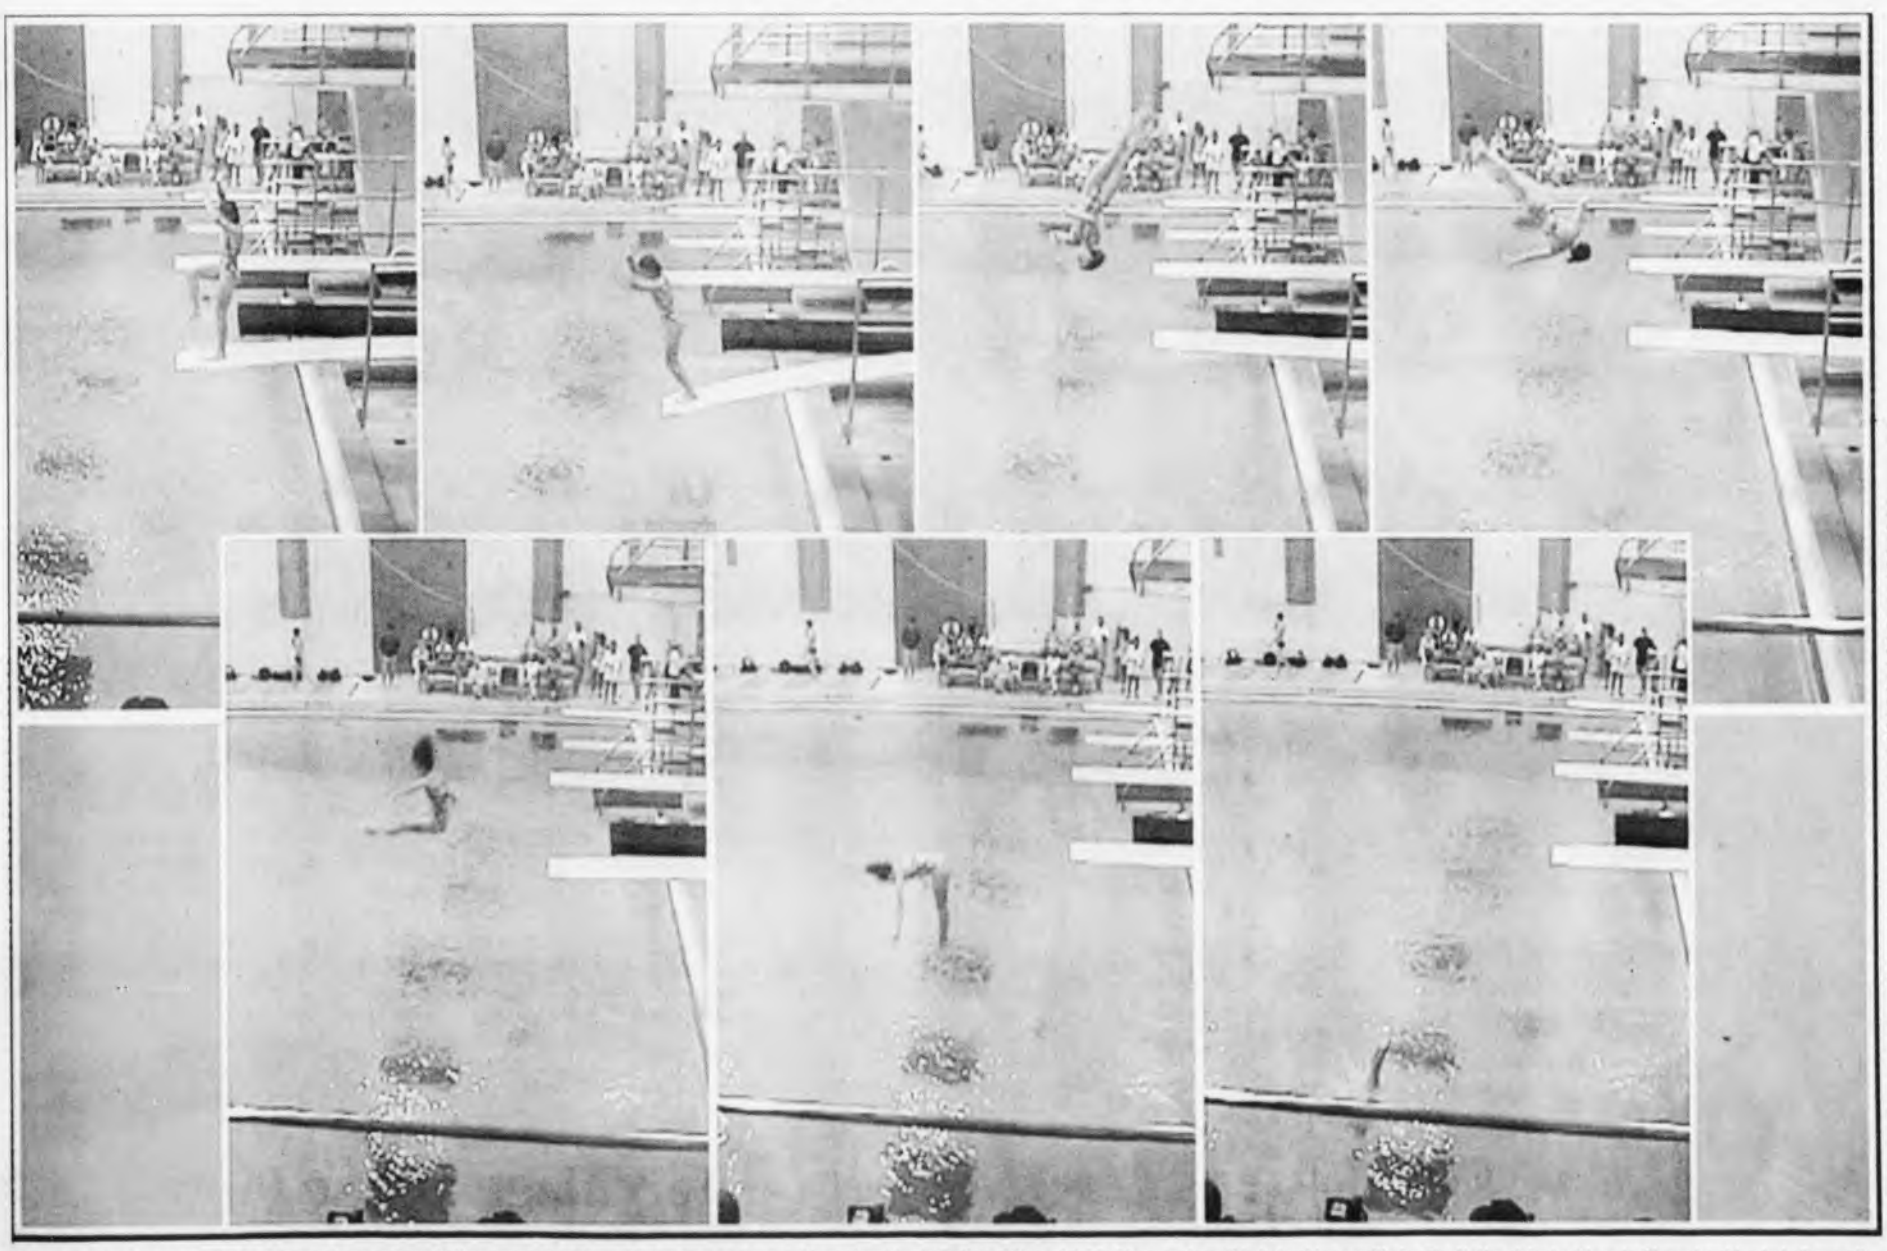
Also in college, Krupczak will be competing in winter track for the first time, as Cohasset High offers only spring track. The main difference will be the distance of races— instead running the 100 and 200 meters like he did for Cohasset on an outdoor track, it will be the 55 and 300 meter races.

"It should be a good challenge," Krupczak speculated. "I am really looking forward to it."

Krupczak also mentioned that, by doing winter track, he will be in peak condition at the start of the spring for the first time in his career.

"He is just an incredible athlete," lauded varsity football coach Tony Rolfe, who watched Krupczak develop into one of the best running backs in the area behind a very tough offensive line.

Krupczak, a captain of the undefeated South Shore League champion track team this past spring, was a member of one of the best 4x100 meter teams around.



The team consisted of Jason Brown, Steve Laney (both will be seniors this fall) Krupczak, and his junior brother Jared.

"We had such a good team despite all the injuries," said Brian Krupczak, alluding to the maladies of Jared Krupczak and Laney, and of course the hamstring injury he sustained himself in the final league meet of the season.

In fact, that injury led to the only disappointing moment of the track season. After taping up the injury to not only compete in but win the state Class D 200 meters championship, Krupczak decided to pull out from the All-State Competition for fear of destroying a possible college career.

"I wanted to go out and compete, but I don't have any regrets," he admits. "I finished off strong."

And strongly he will head to Virginia, hoping to remove any doubt that he made the right decision.

Kelsey Bell is shown completing a forward one-and-one-half somersault with a full-twist dive at Zone A Championships in Buffalo, NY, on Jul 22. Dives such as this helped her qualify for The National Junior Olympic Championships in Indianapolis this week. Among others, the US's top 30 divers in Kelsey's age group will compete.

The three riders are hoping to raise a total of $10,000. Tax deductible donations can be made by sending a check to the PMC/Jimmy Fund at 77 Fourth Ave, Needham MA, 02494- rider # MF0064

The simple yet fundamental question was put to all three riders: "Why the PMC?" Certainly, I probed, there are less grueling means for raising the kind of money you will be working on this weekend. All three had similar answers, with Fechter perhaps summing it up best.

"We're raising money, but I think we're also celebrating the fact that we're all healthy and happy," said Fechter, who has had a few people close to him diagnosed with cancer, among them Linda's uncle, recently diagnosed with brain cancer.

"This does hit home," he continued. "You can't take health and happiness for granted. We're the lucky ones. You think about what some of these families with children stricken with cancer must go through, and you just thank God your kids are healthy."

A student is not eligible to participate if he or she has not had a physical examination within the previous year. Students who have the exam performed by their own family physician must provide a note signed by their physician clearing them to participate in sports.

ELIGIBILITY

All student athletes must adhere to the eligibility rules outlined in the CHS Athletic Department Student Behavior Code. At the start of each season, the student-athlete and a parent or guardian must sign the Student Behavior Code Agreement, which applies to all eligibility rules regarding academics, chemical health, attendance, age and all MIAA and South Shore League rules. All players, coaches and parents are expected to represent Cohasset High School as good citizens who display good sportsmanship at all times.

USER FEES

The Cohasset School Committee has established a user fee of $75 for the first sport, $75 for the second sport, and $50 for the third sport, per athlete, for a total of $200 per year if a student participates in three different sports. These funds will be utilized to offset the reductions in the athletic budget.

In order for a student to participate in a sport, the entire user fee must be received on or before the first day of practice; no exceptions will be made. This fee, which is non-refundable (after the first game), does not guarantee that a student receive equal playing time during each game of his/her selected sport. If this fee poses an unusual hardship for any student's family, the parent/guardian should call either the principal or athletic director so that arrangements can be made for the student(s) to participate. Payment should be by check, made payable to Cohasset High School.

INSURANCE

All members of interscholastic teams representing Cohasset High School are covered by special athletic insurance. This insurance is "non-duplicating"; it is intended to provide coverage for expenses in excess of any personal or family coverage, but within limitations of the policy.

For questions or concerns, call Ron Ford, Cohasset Middle/Senior High School athletic director, 781-383-6103 or e-mail: rford@chs.ssec.org.

Robby McCunney, a 9-year old Cohasset Little League All-Star, posted a phenomenal pitching performance. In 35 innings, he allowed only two hits, one run and five walks while notching 95 strikeouts. During one stretch of the season, he hurled 27 consecutive hitless, scoreless inning.

Harbor Island Triathlon

On August 19 the Harbor Islands Triathlon will take place in Hull.

A half-mile ocean swim from George's Island to Pemberton Point will be followed by a 8.5 mile bike race from Hull Gut to the War Memorial and bandstand followed by a 6. 2 mile run from the High School to the War Memorial and along Hull Bay finishing at Hull High School. The event begins at 10:00 AM from George's Island with all participants arriving at Pemberton Point by 9:00 AM.

Call 617 223-8666 for information and registration.

ing ahead to the possibility of playing at the next level. He has played in several showcase tourneys, including one earlier two weeks ago at Dodds Stadium in Norwich, Conn. — the home of the (boo) Yankees AA affiliate Norwich Navigators — in front of scouts from dozens of colleges.

There's still the possibility that with a monster senior campaign, the 6-foot-1 first baseman could travel the same path as Conroy, choosing between college and professional ball. However, Smith sounds as if he's trying hard not to get caught up in that fantasy.

"Sure, playing pro ball is always in the back of your mind, but right now I'd just consider myself lucky if baseball can help get me into a good college," said Smith. "I think it's best if that's what I focus on."

Given his busy schedule, Smith was only able to play in three of the Cohasset Legion team's 20 games this season. He missed the first half dozen or so tilts due to the state high school tourney. After that, it was the showcase tourneys and other obligations (such as the weeklong Appalachia Community Project) that interfered.

"It's been hard for Greg not to play in those (legion) games with a lot of the kids he grew up with," said Greg's mother, Pearl Smith. "But you only get so many opportunities to impress college scouts. He knows how important it is to try to take advantage of this."

year program on the defensive front, keeping the Lady Rams in a lot of games this season…Though mainly a defensive player, Shairis also managed to score three goals this season…But it was her work on defense that made her shine…Her ability to execute close man-to-man play on some of the South Shore's best scorers and impressive defensive stick skills made her a standout in the PC….Her good speed also came in handy during fast-break plays and in breaking up opponents' offensive strategies….Shairis plans to attend William and Mary College in Virginia in the fall where she will major in Biology and play club lacrosse. Marshfield coach Sue Collins: "She's a very strong defensive player and was instrumental in keeping our games close. She's clearly our most aggressive player and will leave a big hole in our defense. She was a nice team leader. She led by example. We'll definitely feel the loss."

Carrie Williams - Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder - Hingham

Carrie Williams

Was the clutch player on offense who shined when she needed to…Scored multiple goals in Hingham's win over Minnechaug Regional in the state semi-finals and in the 12-10 win over Winchester in the State Championship…A Pilgrim Conference All-star, Williams scored 54 goals and 19 assists this season…A co-captain on the team, Williams received the Coaches Award at Hingham High…Williams also captained Hingham's Patriot League champion soccer team and was the team's MVP, earning her an honorable mention to the Mariner/Journal All-Scholastic soccer team…Williams will attend Ohio Wesleyan University in the fall and will continue her soccer career.

Tara Cushman - Junior
Goalie - Scituate

Tara Cushman

The only goalie the Scituate High girls lacrosse program has had in its three year history… Pilgrim Conference All-Star…made 172 saves for Lady Sailors in their first year of varsity competition this spring, backstopping a young defense…a well rounded goaltender and invaluable team leader, according to coach Paula Evans…plays lacrosse year round, going indoors with several of her S.H.S. teammates at the Canton Sports Dome in the fall and winter…has acted as Manager of the Scituate football team the last two years…would like to play lacrosse in college, and has participated in several showcase tourneys this summer…plans to major in sports management, and has already looked at Ithaca, UMass-Amherst and Springfield, among other universities…a member of the National Honor Society…on the staff of the Scituate High newspaper: "Scituation" and a member of the Student Council… Scituate lacrosse coach Paula Evans: "Tara is the key defensive figure on our team. You know you can count on her to come up with the saves we need, and when she's really on she can come up with one big save after another. She kept us in a lot of games this year. She really stays in the game mentally and communicates well with her defenders, which is key for a goalie. There are still parts of the games she's learning, but she made a lot of improvement this year, and I'm expecting even more next year."

Nicole Evans - Junior
Center Midfield - Scituate

Nicole Evans

The leading playmaker and most complete member of the Scituate High squad…finished junior year with 34 goals and a remarkable team high 28 assists… SHS's career points leader with 62 goals and 45 assists… Pilgrim Conference All-Star…the daughter of Scituate coach Paula Evans…possesses excellent stick skills, stamina and knowledge of the game…competed in second straight Bay State Games last month, playing for Southeast team that won the Silver Medal… plays lacrosse year round, going indoors with several of her S.H.S. teammates at the Canton Sports Dome in the fall and winter…ranks among the top 60 in her class with a 3.3 GPA… would like to play lacrosse in college, and is participating in several showcase tourneys this summer, including upcoming event in Lake Placid always well attended by college scouts…has already received letters from coaches at Canisius and UVM…is leaning towards a Liberal Arts major…runs track at SHS in the winter and works out at Exceleration Sports Training in Norwell…Scituate Coach Paula Evans: "Nicole is a very unselfish player, sometimes maybe even a little too unselfish. Her abilities to see the whole field, make good decision and play at both ends of the field are crucial to us."

Elizabeth Ghilardi - Junior (Capt.)
Attack - Norwell

Elizabeth Ghilardi

A natural athlete who fell in love with lacrosse not long after first taking it up five years ago… also plays varsity soccer and basketball for Norwell High, but lacrosse is now far and away her first love (she's always got that stick in her hands," says her mother)… among the conference leaders in scoring this season with 55 goals and 29 assists, leading the Lady Clippers, remarkably, to a state tourney berth in their first year of varsity competition… Pilgrim Conference All-Star…played for the silver medal winning southeast team in last month's Bay State Games… sister of Dave Ghilardi, who graduated from NHS this spring after standout scholastic careers in hockey and baseball…Norwell Coach Jen Kent: "There's no doubt that Liz was our go to person this season. And she deserved to be. She's not only the most talented player on the team, but she's probably the hardest working one too. She's always the first one on the field and the last one off it. She just loves the game and that comes across all the time."

Meghan Dwyer - Junior
Goalie - Norwell

Meghan Dwyer

Coach Jen Kent called Dwyer "the main reason" for the Lady Clippers remarkable feat of qualifying for the state tourney in their first season of varsity play this spring…has been the starting goalie for the Norwell High team since her freshman year, the team competing in JV play only the previous two seasons…saved 71 percent of the shots she faced this season…athletic and well rounded goalie…a Pilgrim Conference All-Star…backstopped silver medal effort at Bay State Games for southeast squad… hopes to play lacrosse in college at a Div. 2 or 3 school…has attended several lacrosse camps this summer, including a highly acclaimed goalie camp this past week at Milton Academy… also plays varsity soccer…a member of the National Honors Society…plays cello for the Southeastern Philharmonic Orchestra…sings for Norwell High's acappella musical group "The Decibells" made up of Norwell … Norwell coach Jen Kent: "I can honestly say Meghan was the main reason we made it to the state tourney. She just defends the net so well. It's scary to think where we would have been without her. She makes good decisions on when to come out with the ball and when to pass it. She also does a nice job of helping her defenders out, letting them know where to go."

Casey Logan - Junior
Attack - Scituate

Casey Logan

The leading scorer for the Lady Sailors this season with 54 goals and 11 assists…competed in second straight Bay State Games last month, playing for Southeast team that won the Silver Medal… good stick skills, strong moves and a quick shot make her deadly around the net…scored most of her goals early in the season, faking out defenders and goalies alike on drives to the net… plays lacrosse year round, going indoors with several of her S.H.S. teammates at the Canton Sports Dome in the fall and winter… would like to play lacrosse in college, and is participating in several showcase tourneys this summer, including upcoming event in Lake Placid always well attended by college scouts…has also run cross country and played basketball ant Scituate High…an Honor Roll student… Scituate Coach Paula Evans: "Casey has a knack for getting her shots off against pressure. She has some nice moves and a pump fake that gets defenders going the wrong way a lot. I think if she gets a little bit stronger and quicker this year, she could really have a great senior season."

Cohasset track/football star heads off to college

selves as much as Krupczak does during the off-season.

"I feel I can always push myself to improve," said Krupczak, who spent most days last winter working with Cohasset High School utility coach Mark Hall.

Krupczak also wanted to thank his track coaches, Al LaFountain, as well as Hall.

With all the lifting he does, in addition to the extended work Krupczak completes with plyometric blocks, he still feels there are some technique problems he has, such as getting his knees higher when striding.

His technique is something he looks forward to improving upon when he heads into his freshman year at Washington and Lee University in Virginia, a school of only 2,000 students, but one with a very impressive track and field program.

Washington and Lee is a Div. 3 school, which is what Krupczak wanted: a highly competitive program where he would flourish. His best times in the 200 meter race might even land him a spot in the D3 nationals next year.

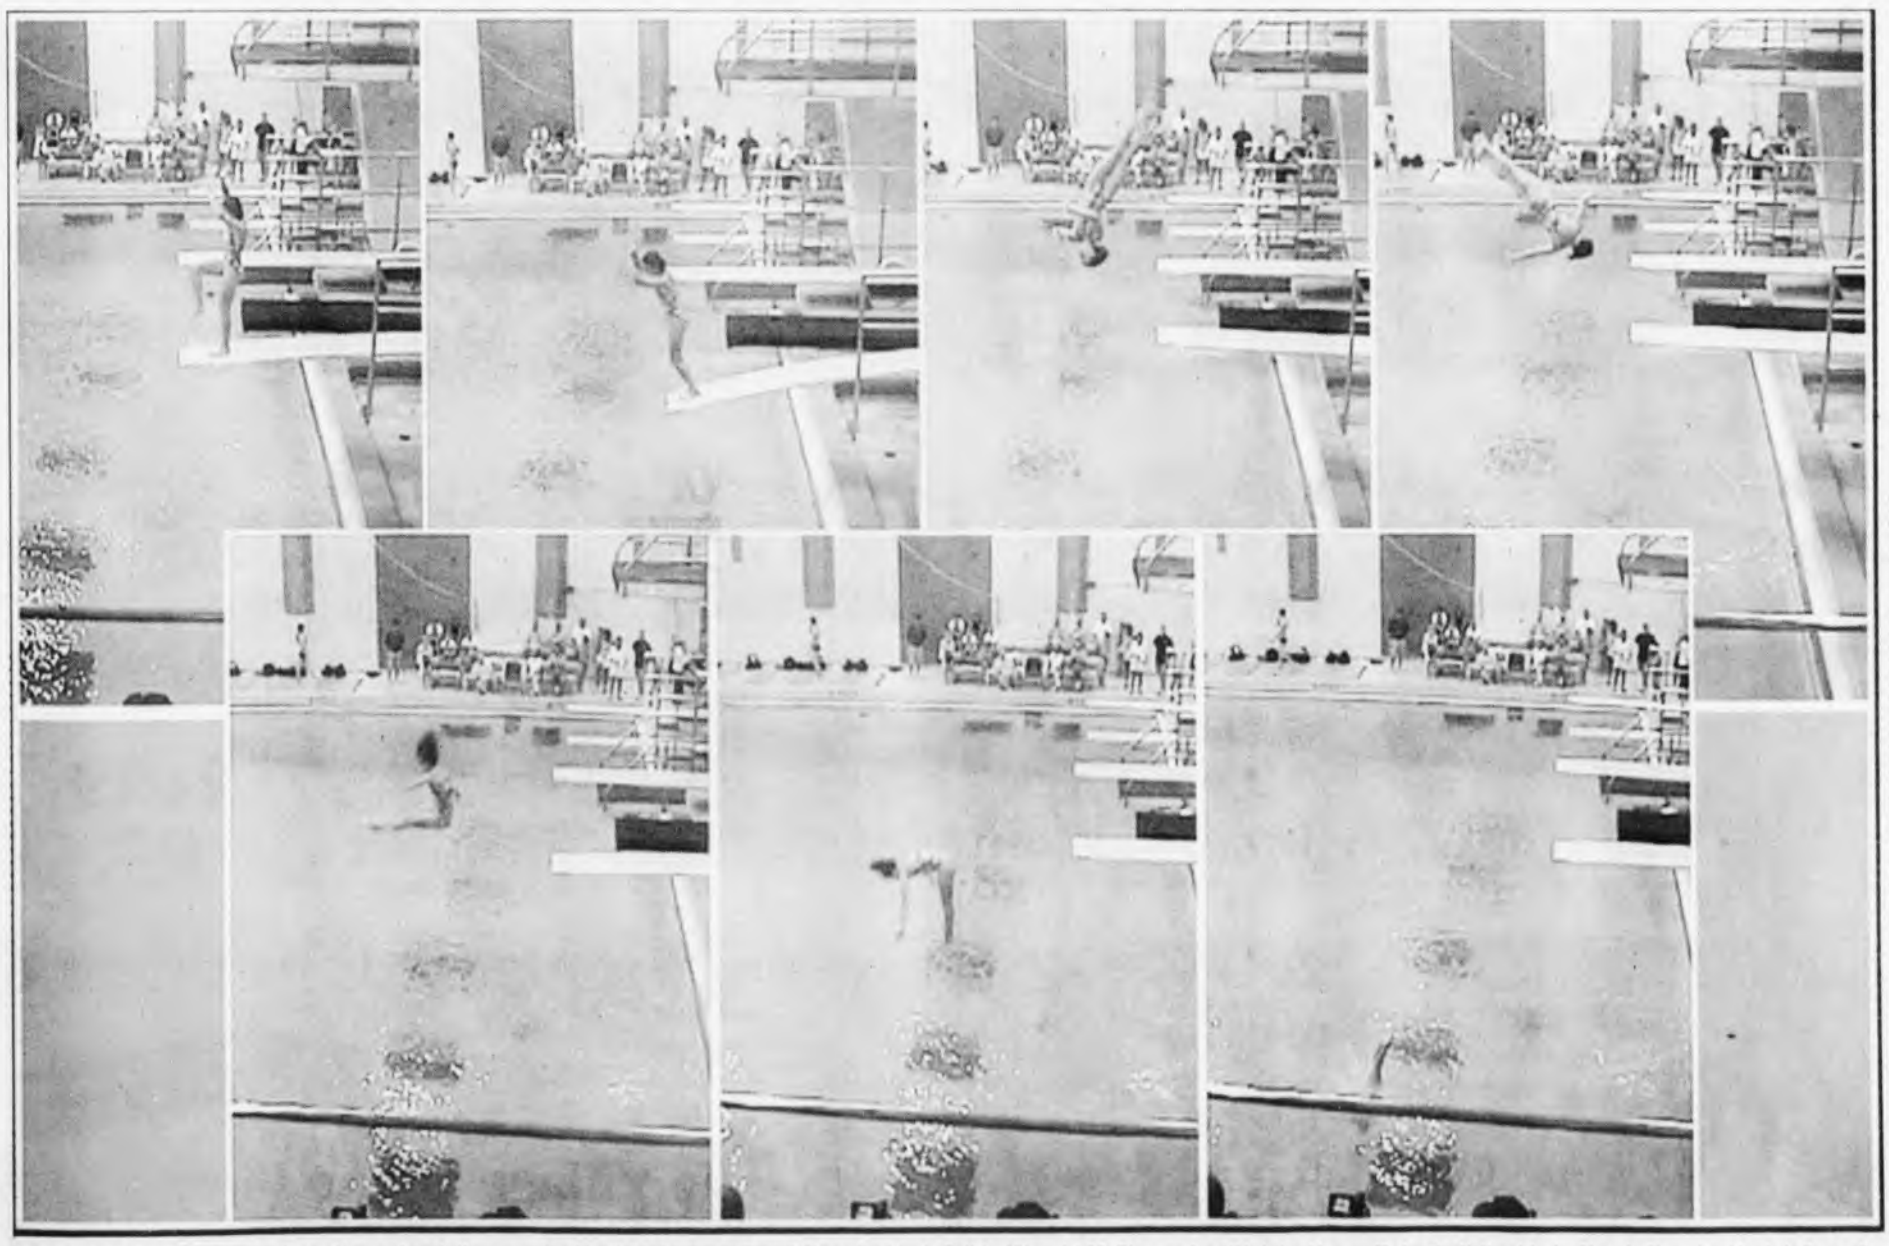
Also in college, Krupczak will be competing in winter track for the first time, as Cohasset High offers only spring track. The main difference will be the distance of races— instead running the 100 and 200 meters like he did for Cohasset on an outdoor track, it will be the 55 and 300 meter races.

"It should be a good challenge," Krupczak speculated. "I am really looking forward to it."

Krupczak also mentioned that, by doing winter track, he will be in peak condition at the start of the spring for the first time in his career.

"He is just an incredible athlete," lauded varsity football coach Tony Rolfe, who watched Krupczak develop into one of the best running backs in the area behind a very tough offensive line.

Krupczak, a captain of the undefeated South Shore League champion track team this past spring, was a member of one of the best 4x100 meter teams around.



The team consisted of Jason Brown, Steve Laney (both will be seniors this fall) Krupczak, and his junior brother Jared.

"We had such a good team despite all the injuries," said Brian Krupczak, alluding to the maladies of Jared Krupczak and Laney, and of course the hamstring injury he sustained himself in the final league meet of the season.

In fact, that injury led to the only disappointing moment of the track season. After taping up the injury to not only compete in but win the state Class D 200 meters championship, Krupczak decided to pull out from the All-State Competition for fear of destroying a possible college career.

"I wanted to go out and compete, but I don't have any regrets," he admits. "I finished off strong."

And strongly he will head to Virginia, hoping to remove any doubt that he made the right decision.

Kelsey Bell is shown completing a forward one-and-one-half somersault with a full-twist dive at Zone A Championships in Buffalo, NY, on Jul 22. Dives such as this helped her qualify for The National Junior Olympic Championships in Indianapolis this week. Among others, the US's top 30 divers in Kelsey's age group will compete.

Cohasset Swim and Dive Team Award Night

The Cohasset swim and dive team will hold an awards night this Friday, Aug 3, at the Osgood Gym.

The awards ceremony gets underway at 6:30, and is expected to go until around 8 p.m.

Refreshments will be served in the cafeteria after the ceremony.

A night of "Family Fun" is scheduled after the awards in the gym, with a DJ and entertainment.

Swim team pushes Yacht Club team under

What a great summer it has been for the Cohasset Swim Team. On Friday, the locals improved to 6-0 on the season, taking first place in 50 out of 64 races and defeating Scituate Harbor Yacht Club, at home, by more than 200 points.

This was a nice tune-up for the showdown with fellow unbeatens, the Scituate Knights of Columbus team, on Friday.

It was a beautiful afternoon on the harbor and it got off to an excellent start with wins for Cohasset in all of the 100-yard medley relays. The eight and under boys took first and third places (1st: Carrier, Campbell, Buckley, Durkin, T.; 3rd: Mahoney, Carpenter, Durkin, J.; Culhane) and the girls went straight into first and second places (1st: Karski; Fontaine; Musto; Michalowski; 2nd: Kucinski; Seraikas; Murphy; Carrier). The ten and under's maintained the momentum with a first for the boys (1st: Ofsthun; Porter; Doonan; Stevenson) and a first and third for the girls (1st: Meehan; Lehr, S.; Mahoney, C.; Lehr, T.; 3rd: Mahoney, M.; Teague; Dickinson; Hunt). And the 12 and under boys and girls finished in first and third places (boys: 1st: Dickinson; Daley; Doonan; Zappolo; 3rd: Kuppens; Musto; Stevenson; Porter; girls: 1st: Hernan; Durkin; Garber; Englander; 3rd: Plante; Previte; Teague; Campbell). The relays ended with a win for the seventeen and under boys in their 200-yard race (1st: McCarthy; Roach, J.; Flynn; Blackburn) and second and third place finishes for the girls (2nd: Jerome; Anderson; Daley; Lehr; 3rd: James; Swain; Ogrodnik; Orsini).

As the teams prepared for the individual medleys, the ten and under boys and girls swam their 50-yard freestyles. The boys finished second and third (2nd: Doonan; B.; 3rd: Stevenson, G.) and the girls claimed first and third (1st: Meehan, S.; 3rd: Mahoney, C.). Cohasset score was now 70 to Scituate's 41.

Cohasset's success continued with consistently strong performances in the 100-yard individual medleys, and a win at every age level (boys, 12 and under: 1st: Dickinson, R.; 2nd: Doonan, P.; girls, 12 and under: 1st: Durkin, L.; 2nd: Hernan, E.; boys, 14 and under: 1st: Berg, P.; 3rd: McCarthy, D.; girls, 14 and under: 1st: Anderson, C.; 2nd: Daley, M.; boys, 17 and under: 1st: Ingber, D.; 3rd: Flynn, C.; girls, 17 and under: 2nd: Orsini, M.; 4th: Jerome, E.). With the medleys complete, Cohasset's lead had increased by a further thirty points.

The 25-yard freestyles got off to the usual productive start, with wins for the eight and under boys and girls (boys: 1st: Durkin, T.; 2nd: Campbell, B.; girls: 1st: Michalowski, A.; 2nd: Fontaine, E.), and for the ten and under boys and girls (boys: 1st: Doonan, B.; 3rd: Plante, J.; girls: 1st: Lehr, T.; 3rd: Mahoney, M.). The 50-yard event continued the pattern. The twelve and under boys and girls won their races (boys: 1st: Zappolo, N.; 2nd: Porter, N.; girls: 1st: Garber, C.; 2nd: Englander, E.) and the fourteen and under boys and girls were close behind with first and second, and first and third place finishes (boys: 1st: McCarthy, D.; 2nd: Roach, K.; girls: 1st: Lehr, R.; 3rd: Ogrodnik, M.). The seventeen and under boys and girls completed the picture with a first and second for the boys and a second and third for the girls (boys: 1st: Roach, J.; 2nd: Blackburn, C.; girls: 2nd: Orsini, M.; 3rd: Sida, C.). Cohasset had now accumulated 179 points to Scituate's 78.

The butterfly was next up and, once again, Cohasset was off to a good start. The eight and under boys and girls took first and second in their races (boys: 1st: Carrier, J.; 2nd: Durkin, T.; girls: 1st: Karski, E.; 2nd: Musto, E.). The ten and under boys fell just behind with second and third places, but the girls came right back with first and second position finishes (boys: 2nd: Doonan, B.; 3rd: Stevenson, G.; girls: 1st: Mahoney, C.; 2nd: Lehr, T.). The twelve and under boys and girls repeated the pattern, with a second and third for the boys and first and second for the girls (boys: 2nd: Doonan, P.; 3rd: Musto, C.; girls, 12 and under: 1st: Garber, C.; 2nd: Englander, E.). Cohasset went on to win three of the remaining four butterflies, taking their score to 242, to Scituate's 103 (boys, 14 and under: 1st: Berg, P.; girls, 14 and under: 1st: Daley, M.; 3rd: Ogrodnik, M.; boys, 17 and under: 1st: Ingber, D.; 2nd: Flynn, C.; girls, 17 and under: 2nd: Jerome, E.; 3rd: Orsini, M.).

In the breaststroke event the Cohasset swimmers kept up the pace to win three of the four 25 yard races (boys, 8 and under: 1st: Buckley, T.; 2nd: Durkin, J.; girls, 8 and under: 1st: Fontaine, E.; 3rd: Michalowski, A.; boys, 10 and under: 2nd: Porter, I.; 4th: Plante, J.; girls, 10 and under: 1st: Lehr, S.; 3rd: Teague, K.). And in the 50-yard event, Cohasset finished first in four of the six races (boys, 12 and under: 3rd: Zappolo, N.; 4th: Musto, C.; girls, 12 and under: 1st: Durkin, L.; 2nd: Swain, K.; boys, 14 and under: 1st: Roach, K.; 2nd: Daley, B.; girls, 14 and under: 1st: Anderson, C.; 2nd: Sida, C.; boys, 17 and under: 1st: Ingber, D.; 2nd: Roach, J.; girls, 17 and under: 3rd: Previte, M.; 4th: Campbell, A.). With only two more events left, Cohasset led Scituate by 163 points.

Over the afternoon Cohasset had developed a very steady and productive rhythm, and it continued into the last individual event of the day. In the 25-yard backstroke Cohasset secured a win in three out of four races (boys, 8 and under: 1st: Carrier, J.; 3rd: Mahoney, R.; girls, 8 and under: 1st: Karski, E.; 3rd: Kucinski, K.; boys, 10 and under: 2nd: Porter, I.; 4th: Ofsthun, C.; girls, 10 and under: 1st: Meehan, S.; 3rd: Lehr, S.). The 50-yard events were equally productive, with wins in five out of six races (boys, 12 and under: 2nd: Dickinson, R.; 3rd: Daley, B.; girls, 12 and under: 1st: Hernan, E.; 3rd: Sacks, M.; boys, 14 and under: 1st: McCarthy, D.; 2nd: Berg, P.; girls, 14 and under: 1st: Daley, M.; 2nd: Lehr, R.; boys, 17 and under: 1st: Blackburn, C.; girls, 17 and under: 1st: Jerome, E.; 3rd: James, K.). Going into the final event the score was now Cohasset: 357, Scituate: 162.

It had been downhill all the way for Cohasset and as they came into the final leg of the meet they kept right on winning. The eight and under boys took first and second place while the girls took first and third (boys: 1st: Durkin, T.; Buckley, T.; Durkin, J.; Carrier; 2nd: Carpenter; Culhane; Mahoney; Campbell; girls: 1st: Karski; Musto; Michalowski; Fontaine; 4th: Seraikas; Teague; Carrier; Murphy). The ten and under boys slipped a little, finishing second, but the girls came back with first and third position finishes (boys: 2nd: Stevenson; Plante; Ofsthun; Porter; girls, 10 and under: 1st: Lehr, S.; Mahoney, C.; Lehr, T.; Meehan, S.; 3rd: Culhane, C.; Zappolo; Asnault; Regan). Both the twelve and under boys and girls won their races (boys: 1st: Dickinson; Daley; Doonan; Zappolo; 3rd: Musto; Kuppens; Stevenson; Porter; girls: 1st: Hernan; Garber; Englander; Durkin; 4th: Regan; McBride; Hurd; Smith) leaving the seventeen and under's to finish the meet with a win for boys and second and fourth places for the girls (boys: 1st: Berg; Roach, J.; Roach, K.; Ingber; girls: 2nd: Anderson; Ogrodnik; Lehr; Sacks; 4th: Sida; James; Madge; Swain). As the afternoon's activities came to an end Cohasset had secured another tremendous win, beating Scituate 413 to 202.

Congratulations to all the Cohasset swimmers who, once again, produced a great team effort. And to their coach Alison Hughes, and her assistants Ted Hughes and Garet Jacobucci, who have created such a winning formula. The team approaches the pre-Championship week undefeated, but this Friday they will take on the powerful Knight's of Columbus squad for what will undoubtedly be their biggest challenge of the season. We look forward to an exciting afternoon.

Annual event raises $16,000 for Children's Hospital

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Last Saturday and Sunday, the entire Cohasset tennis community got together for its annual Children's Hospital Benefit Tennis Tournament, amassing over $16,000.

The event, dating back to the 1950s, is played on the exquisite privately owned courts around town, 21 in all being used.

"That is half of the beauty of the tournament," said a smiling Daralynn Evans, the head coordinator of the tourney.

The tournament was played every year from the 50s up until the 70s, at which point, there was a "lull", as Evans called it. But about ten years ago, former ballboys and ballgirls from the original tourney resurrected the event, raising more money than ever before for the Children's Hospital.

In addition to the cover charge for playing in the tournament (the benefits going to the hospital), there was also a large silent auction last Friday night, doubling last years total money raised.

In the tournament, there were four different categories of skill levels, comprising all 100 mixed doubles teams which came to Cohasset for the tourney.

The least competitive level was the "C" group, which was won by local partners Shellanne Durkin and Donal Cahill. The pair took the championships in the C's, defeating Janet Robinson and Mike Rawson in three sets, also earning themselves an automatic berth in next year's "B-Level" competition.

The B's were won by Cohasset's Ralph and Nancy Froio, who survived a three-set match with Judy Armen and Doug LeBlanc.

The next category of players was the "A-Level," a highly competitive yet fun field.

This category was won by a pair of top-draw hitters, Sue Sookiasian, a member of the Cohasset Benefit Committee, and Mike Davis, a tennis pro from Scituate's Driftway Club. This terrific tandem took a two set win— 6-1, 6-3—over the very tough team of Deedee Emanualle and Chris Neelon.

Your reporter, teamed with high school freshman Elizabeth Stone, was knocked out in the first round of the A-Level by a pair of free swinging six-footers who were relentless at the net, 6-3, 6-4.

However, we managed to bounce back and take our next match in the Consolation Bracket— 6-3, 6-2. The win earned us ticket to some Sunday play, something I had not expected coming into the tourney.

After a semi-finals victory Sunday morning, we found ourselves in the consolation finals against Brian Hill and Brenda Hill. The unrelated Hills were fresh off their semi-finals victory over college junior Allison Walsh and my CHS doubles partner Jeff Scribner.

Lisa Tolen serves up a killer serve in the championship match in the A+ division of Cohasset's annual Children's Hospital Benefit Tennis Tournament last week. Tolen, a league player from Boston, and her partner, Sosa Amadin, lost in the finals to Jammie Kenney and Steve Flanagan. 0

The Hills, who on Saturday played what many considered the "Match of the Weekend" with a three set tiebreaker contest versus Carole Meers and Eric Braun, won the A-Level Consolation finals.

The highest level of competition in the tournament was the A+ category, also known as the "Super Pro Level." The winners of this bracket were Steve Flanagan, one of the top male singles players in New England, and his partner Jamie Kenney.

The runners up in this category were Lisa Tolen, a league player from Boston and her partner Sosa Amadin, an intimidating six-and-a- half-feet tall, 280 pounds, and a serve which had been clocked a 140 miles per hour.

Rumor has it, he will be trying out for the New England Patriots this summer. The two sport athlete collected more than 15 aces in the two set loss.

The third place team in the bracket was last year's A-Level champions, David and Margaret Barcumb.

The final A+ team was a very unique father-daughter team of Cohasset's John Englander and high school freshman Kate.

Many a thank you go out to the entire benefit committee for such a smoothly run tournament, most specifically to Soostaktian, Carole Meers, Barbara Dalrymple, Larraine Tarpey, Sandy Crough and Daralynn Evans.

Apologies: Due to a layout error, this story ran only in part last week.

'42nd Street' tap dances into town

Company Theatre stages hit Broadway show through Aug. 26

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

It is one of the most well-known and loved Broadway shows of all time, and for the next month South Shore theater-goers will get a chance to take a walk down 42nd Street at the Company Theatre. The Norwell theater group will stage its ambitious production of the show Aug. 3-26.

More than 40 actors and dancers will be taking part in the production, a premise which presented a challenge to the show's directors Zoe Bradford, Jordie Saucerman, and music director Michael Joseph.

"Part of the challenge of putting on the show was working with so many people," Bradford said. "It's tough to get 40 people tap dancing in unison."

Bradford said the plot of 42nd Street is one people have come to love. It is about a young woman from Pennsylvania named Peggy Sawyer who dreams of going to New York City and acting on Broadway. At one point, she gets a chance to audition for a show, but unfortunately, she accidentally, breaks the ankle of the show's star during the audition. The production takes off from there.

"It's a very charming, old-fashioned type of theme," Bradford said. "But that doesn't stop it from being a fast-moving, well-paced show."

Although Bradford said the story line of 42nd Street is an entertaining one, she said the other magical aspect of the show is the dancing, singing, and overall musical element.

"The music in the production is pretty amazing," she said. "It's very addictive. It sticks in your head. It's really 1930s-sounding music, but it's got a contemporary feel."

Joseph said he thinks people typically love the show's soundtrack because of all the classic Broadway songs that have come out of it such as "We're in the Money," "Lullaby of Broadway," and "42nd Street."

"The music reflects the concept of someone getting their big break on Broadway," Joseph said. "The songs in the show are definitely supportive of the story line."

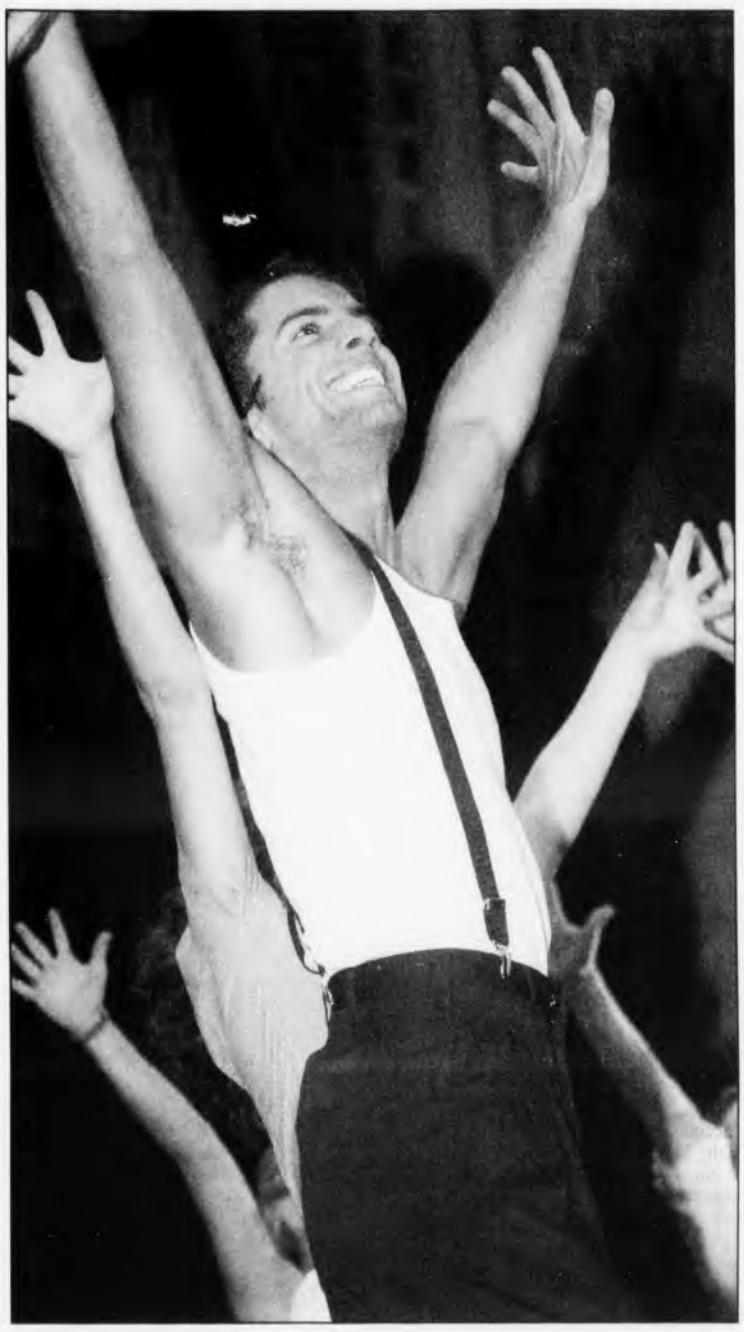
Joseph described the different scenes in the play as being "really big, splashy production numbers." At the same time, he added there are a few songs which reflect the time period in which the show takes place, the 1930s.

"I think some of the songs really accent the Depression Era, but these particular songs evoke a positive attitude on a very trying time in history," he said.

Bradford said this will mark the second time that The Company Theatre has put on 42nd Street, the last time was in 1988. She added one of the most exciting things about putting in on this time around is that the same two people who had the lead roles in 1988, John King of Weymouth and Joyce Avitabile of Walpole, are starring in the show again.

"Those people who have already seen the show will be able to see our version of it, and for those who haven't seen it, you're in for a real visual treat. It's just great entertainment."
Music director Michael Joseph

Bradford said another neat aspect of the show is the costumes, which she described as "authentic, vintage clothing" styles.



"Really, the show embodies all the wonderful aspects of the traditional Broadway musical," she said. "At the same time, it's got some wonderful character parts, great music, and comedy. The end is also really a trip."

Bradford explained in the show's last scene, scenery of Broadway was incorporated into the set design — more than 6,000 different lights were used for it.

"Those people who have already seen the show will be able to see our version of it, and for those who haven't seen it, you're in for a real visual treat," Joseph said. "It's just great entertainment."

"It's a show for everyone," added Bradford. "When people leave the show, they'll want to go out and learn how to tap dance."

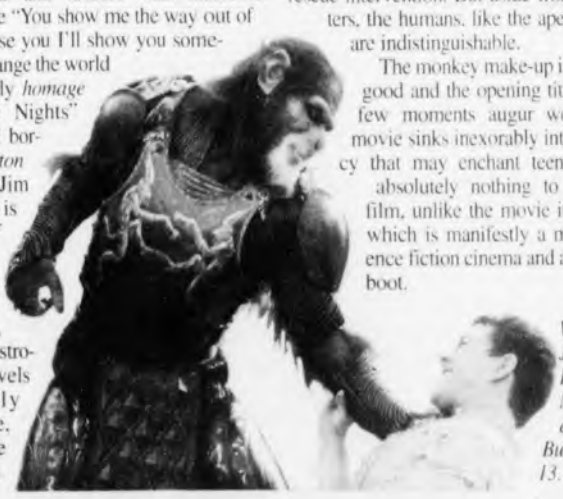
Planet of the Apes (C-)



You have to admire a film that swipes libertarian guru Karl Hess's famous rallying cry for Barry Goldwater's 1964 presidential campaign and spews it out as "Extremism in the defense of apes is no vice!" And who could resist a flip-flop of Rodney King's plaintive, naive mumble-mope, rephrasing it as "Why can't we all just get along?" For that matter, huzzahs to a "re-imagining" – in the parlance of real people that means "remake," but the director isn't into remakes, just re-imaginings – of the 1968 classic that turns National Rifle Association honcho Charlton Heston into a dying chimp who gives his vile son (are you ready?) a gun, and has him exit with the one notable line from the original: "Damn them! Damn them all to hell!" This is a film for the ages.

Or at least for August, mopping up the summer movie season with a mediocrity whose silliness is alleviated now and then by these touches and by a finale so consummately stupid — derived from the original book but altered for the 1968 film — that you leave laughing the rueful laugh of the disenchanted. "Planet of the Apes" is so bad that at times it's guilty fun. Its star, Mark Wahlberg, who amply proved his acting skill in films like "Three Kings" and "The Perfect Storm," is reduced to two lame facial expressions and saddled with ludicrous gung-ho-isms like "You show me the way out of here and I promise you I'll show you something that will change the world forever." This sly homage to the "Boogie Nights" money shot — I borrow from the Boston Herald's Jim Verniere here — is another niblet of corny writing that works in its own nutty way.

Our hero, Leo, is an American astronaut who travels unintentionally through time, winds up on the eponymous planet and meets an ape-ess (Helena Bonham Carter) advocate for the novel notion that people have souls and apes should treat homo sapiens better. Leo leads the humans in their desperate attempt to escape their masters and confronts the major villain, Thade (Tim Roth, malevolently awesome, the chimp you'd fear to bump into in a dark banana patch), a wry, comic-relief slave-trader (Paul Giamatti), and a gorilla (Michael Clarke Duncan) who utters this timely thought: "Take your stinking hands off me, you damn, dirty human."

Unlike Heston, who struggled in a loin cloth, Wahlberg is fully clothed throughout — an unkindness to moviegoers who might enjoy some titillating diversion from the preposterous chatter — although one oppressed female human (Estella Warren) is clothed in a chic little bust-enhancing frock and sports not only what appears to be lip gloss but also Sarah Jessica Parker-ish highlighted blonde hair, maybe periodically chooched up at the salon maintained by the ever-considerate monkeys for certain sub-apes? We've also a woeful dad (Kris Kristofferson) and an annoyingly brave lad who falls off his horse, which propels Leo into a rescue intervention. But aside from these characters, the humans, like the apes of all species, are indistinguishable.

The monkey make-up is eye-poppingly good and the opening titles and the first few moments augur well, though the movie sinks inexorably into a benign idiocy that may enchant teenagers but adds absolutely nothing to the history of film, unlike the movie it "re-imagines," which is manifestly a milestone of science fiction cinema and a helluva ride, to boot.

Wildflower Festival in bloom

Collins and company make Cohasset concert stop Aug. 8

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Judy Collins is doing something a little different on her current tour. Instead of solo concerts, the singer/songwriter is headlining the "Judy Collins Wildflower Festival," which also features Richie Havens, Janis Ian and Roger McGuinn.

"This is really a lot of fun," Collins said by telephone last week from New York. "It's great to out with these people, because I'm such a fan of what they do."

"People love this show. They are just blown away. They stand up and cheer, because it's just one hit after another."
Singer Judy Collins

Collins isn't the only one. Her tour mates have remained constants on the popular music scene since they first achieved fame in the 1960s. Like Collins, Havens was part of the early Greenwich Village folk renaissance, later scoring hits like "Here Come the Sun." Singer-songwriter Ian burst into the public eye in 1966 as a 15-year old with a song about an interracial family called "Society's Child," which she followed up with "At Seventeen." A guitarist, McGuinn was a cofounder of the rock band, "The Byrds," famed for their versions of "Turn, Turn, Turn" and "Mr. Tambourine Man."

"People love this show," explains Collins, 62, of the concert that comes to the South Shore Music Circus next Wednesday. "They are just blown away. They stand up and cheer, because it's just one hit after another."

Audiences have been applauding Collins for over 40 years. Her early musical background was classical piano. By age 10, she began studying with mentor Antonia Brico, the orchestral conductor famed for her work with major symphony orchestras. (The 1974 documentary "Antonia: The Portrait Of The Woman," which Collins co-directed and produced with Jil Godmilow, received an Academy Award nomination as Best Documentary.) Her father, Chuck Collins, was a singer, composer, and broadcaster during the golden age of radio. Born in Seattle, and raised in Los Angeles and Denver, Collins was 13 when she made her public debut performing Mozart's Concerto for Two Pianos. By 16, however, she had moved from playing the Steinway to playing guitar.

"My love of lyrics and the music of people like Woody Guthrie and Pete Seeger really drew me to folk music," Collins says. "And I certainly expect to be associated with the folk movement for as long as I am alive."

It is an association that began while Collins was in high school and singing at folk clubs in Denver, Boulder, and Central City, Colorado. By 1961, Collins had gone east to Boston and New York, where she signed what would become a 35-year contract with Elektra Records. Her first albums were comprised of traditional folk material. As the 1960s grew more rebellious, however, Collins was drawn to the social poets of the time: Tom Paxton, Phil Ochs and Bob Dylan.

Collins has also championed new songwriters, placing their music on her albums and their careers on the map. She was the first artist to record the songs of both Leonard Cohen and Joni Mitchell.

'42nd Street' tap dances into town

Company Theatre stages hit Broadway show through Aug. 26

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

It is one of the most well-known and loved Broadway shows of all time, and for the next month South Shore theater-goers will get a chance to take a walk down 42nd Street at the Company Theatre. The Norwell theater group will stage its ambitious production of the show Aug. 3-26.

More than 40 actors and dancers will be taking part in the production, a premise which presented a challenge to the show's directors Zoe Bradford, Jordie Saucerman, and music director Michael Joseph.

"Part of the challenge of putting on the show was working with so many people," Bradford said. "It's tough to get 40 people tap dancing in unison."

Bradford said the plot of 42nd Street is one people have come to love. It is about a young woman from Pennsylvania named Peggy Sawyer who dreams of going to New York City and acting on Broadway. At one point, she gets a chance to audition for a show, but unfortunately, she accidentally, breaks the ankle of the show's star during the audition. The production takes off from there.

"It's a very charming, old-fashioned type of theme," Bradford said. "But that doesn't stop it from being a fast-moving, well-paced show."

Although Bradford said the story line of 42nd Street is an entertaining one, she said the other magical aspect of the show is the dancing, singing, and overall musical element.

"The music in the production is pretty amazing," she said. "It's very addictive. It sticks in your head. It's really 1930s-sounding music, but it's got a contemporary feel."

Joseph said he thinks people typically love the show's soundtrack because of all the classic Broadway songs that have come out of it such as "We're in the Money," "Lullaby of Broadway," and "42nd Street."

"The music reflects the concept of someone getting their big break on Broadway," Joseph said. "The songs in the show are definitely supportive of the story line."

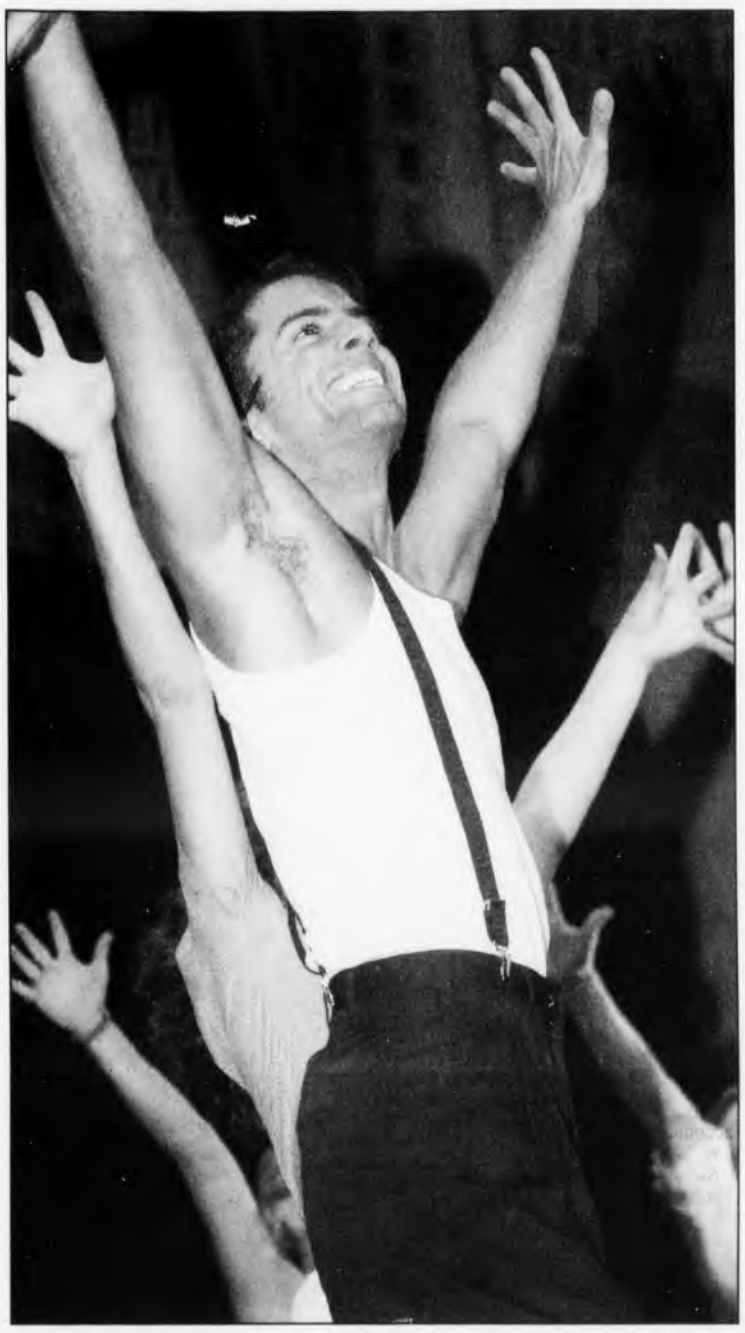
Joseph described the different scenes in the play as being "really big, splashy production numbers." At the same time, he added there are a few songs which reflect the time period in which the show takes place, the 1930s.

"I think some of the songs really accent the Depression Era, but these particular songs evoke a positive attitude on a very trying time in history," he said.

Bradford said this will mark the second time that The Company Theatre has put on 42nd Street, the last time was in 1988. She added one of the most exciting things about putting in on this time around is that the same two people who had the lead roles in 1988, John King of Weymouth and Joyce Avitabile of Walpole, are starring in the show again.

"Those people who have already seen the show will be able to see our version of it, and for those who haven't seen it, you're in for a real visual treat. It's just great entertainment."
Music director Michael Joseph

Bradford said another neat aspect of the show is the costumes, which she described as "authentic, vintage clothing" styles.



"Really, the show embodies all the wonderful aspects of the traditional Broadway musical," she said. "At the same time, it's got some wonderful character parts, great music, and comedy. The end is also really a trip."

Bradford explained in the show's last scene, scenery of Broadway was incorporated into the set design—more than 6,000 different lights were used for it.

"Those people who have already seen the show will be able to see our version of it, and for those who haven't seen it, you're in for a real visual treat," Joseph said. "It's just great entertainment."

"It's a show for everyone," added Bradford. "When people leave the show, they'll want to go out and learn how to tap dance."

Planet of the Apes (C-)

You have to admire a film that swipes libertarian guru Karl Hess's famous rallying cry for Barry Goldwater's 1964 presidential campaign and spews it out as "Extremism in the defense of apes is no vice!" And who could resist a flip-flop of Rodney King's plaintive, naïve mumble-mope, rephrasing it as "Why can't we all just get along?" For that matter, huzzahs to a "re-imagining" – in the parlance of real people that means "remake," but the director isn't into remakes, just re-imaginings – of the 1968 classic that turns National Rifle Association honcho Charlton Heston into a dying chimp who gives his vile son (are you ready?) a gun, and has him exit with the one notable line from the original: "Damn them! Damn them all to hell!" This is a film for the ages.

Or at least for August, mopping up the summer movie season with a mediocrity whose silliness is alleviated now and then by these touches and by a finale so consummately stupid — derived from the original book but altered for the 1968 film — that you leave laughing the rueful laugh of the disenchanted. "Planet of the Apes" is so bad that at times it's guilty fun. Its star, Mark Wahlberg, who amply proved his acting skill in films like "Three Kings" and "The Perfect Storm," is reduced to two lame facial expressions and saddled with ludicrous gung-ho-isms like "You show me the way out of here and I promise you I'll show you something that will change the world forever." This sly homage to the "Boogie Nights" money shot — I borrow from the Boston Herald's Jim Verniere here — is another niblet of corny writing that works in its own nutty way.

Our hero, Leo, is an American astronaut who travels unintentionally through time, winds up on the eponymous planet and meets an ape-ess (Helena Bonham Carter) advocate for the novel notion that people have souls and apes should treat homo sapiens better. Leo leads the humans in their desperate attempt to escape their masters and confronts the major villain, Thade (Tim Roth, malevolently awesome, the chimp you'd fear to bump into in a dark banana patch), a wry, comic-relief slave-trader (Paul Giamatti), and a gorilla (Michael Clarke Duncan) who utters this timely thought: "Take your stinking hands off me, you damn, dirty human."

Unlike Heston, who struggled in a loin cloth, Wahlberg is fully clothed throughout — an unkindness to moviegoers who might enjoy some titillating diversion from the preposterous chatter — although one oppressed female human (Estella Warren) is clothed in a chic little bust-enhancing frock and sports not only what appears to be lip gloss but also Sarah Jessica Parker-ish highlighted blonde hair, maybe periodically chooched up at the salon maintained by the ever-considerate monkeys for certain sub-apes? We've also a woeful dad (Kris Kristofferson) and an annoyingly brave lad who falls off his horse, which propels Leo into a rescue intervention. But aside from these characters, the humans, like the apes of all species, are indistinguishable.

The monkey make-up is eye-poppingly good and the opening titles and the first few moments augur well, though the movie sinks inexorably into a benign idiocy that may enchant teenagers but adds absolutely nothing to the history of film, unlike the movie it "re-imagines," which is manifestly a milestone of science fiction cinema and a helluva ride, to boot.

Collins and company make Cohasset concert stop Aug. 8

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Judy Collins is doing something a little different on her current tour. Instead of solo concerts, the singer/songwriter is headlining the "Judy Collins Wildflower Festival," which also features Richie Havens, Janis Ian and Roger McGuinn.

"This is really a lot of fun," Collins said by telephone last week from New York. "It's great to out with these people, because I'm such a fan of what they do."

"People love this show. They are just blown away. They stand up and cheer, because it's just one hit after another."
Singer Judy Collins

Collins isn't the only one. Her tour mates have remained constants on the popular music scene since they first achieved fame in the 1960s. Like Collins, Havens was part of the early Greenwich Village folk renaissance, later scoring hits like "Here Come the Sun." Singer-songwriter Ian burst into the public eye in 1966 as a 15-year old with a song about an interracial family called "Society's Child," which she followed up with "At Seventeen." A guitarist, McGuinn was a cofounder of the rock band, "The Byrds," famed for their versions of "Turn, Turn, Turn" and "Mr. Tambourine Man."

"People love this show," explains Collins, 62, of the concert that comes to the South Shore Music Circus next Wednesday. "They are just blown away. They stand up and cheer, because it's just one hit after another."

Audiences have been applauding Collins for over 40 years. Her early musical background was classical piano. By age 10, she began studying with mentor Antonia Brico, the orchestral conductor famed for her work with major symphony orchestras. (The 1974 documentary "Antonia: The Portrait Of The Woman," which Collins co-directed and produced with Jil Godmilow, received an Academy Award nomination as Best Documentary.) Her father, Chuck Collins, was a singer, composer, and broadcaster during the golden age of radio. Born in Seattle, and raised in Los Angeles and Denver, Collins was 13 when she made her public debut performing Mozart's Concerto for Two Pianos. By 16, however, she had moved from playing the Steinway to playing guitar.

"My love of lyrics and the music of people like Woody Guthrie and Pete Seeger really drew me to folk music," Collins says. "And I certainly expect to be associated with the folk movement for as long as I am alive."

It is an association that began while Collins was in high school and singing at folk clubs in Denver, Boulder, and Central City, Colorado. By 1961, Collins had gone east to Boston and New York, where she signed what would become a 35-year contract with Elektra Records. Her first albums were comprised of traditional folk material. As the 1960s grew more rebellious, however, Collins was drawn to the social poets of the time: Tom Paxton, Phil Ochs and Bob Dylan.

Collins has also championed new songwriters, placing their music on her albums and their careers on the map. She was the first artist to record the songs of both Leonard Cohen and Joni Mitchell.

Perfect shrimp cocktail

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Anyone can make and serve shrimp cocktail, right? Just boil some shrimp and serve them with cocktail sauce. True, but bad shrimp cocktail abounds because the shrimp is rubbery, tasteless, or mushy and the sauce is lackluster. I wanted to take an American classic and restore it to its culinary pedestal.

The first question is, what type of shrimp should I buy? After much testing, I determined that frozen shrimp purchased with the shell on is key. (Virtually all shrimp are frozen when caught. You have more control over the freshness of the shrimp if you thaw them yourself at home – don't let the retailer do it.) Pre-cooked shrimp are awful, and shrimp without their shells are bland.

In terms of size, size classifications such as "extra large" or "jumbo" mean little. Commercially, shrimp are classified by how many of a particular size it takes to make up one pound. (For example, 16/20s are large shrimp that require 16 to 20 individual shrimp for a one pound weight.) I preferred the 16/20 size for shrimp cocktail both because they are easy to grab hold of and dip into sauce but also because large shrimp require much less peeling per pound. (Note that size classifications are only a rough indicator. Some 21/25s may be the same size as 16/20s.) In addition to size, there are many varieties such as Mexican whites, Gulf whites, Chinese whites, and Black Tiger (an Asian farmed shrimp). The Mexican and Gulf whites are superior in flavor but you will have to go to a fishmonger to find them.

Now it was time to actually cook the shrimp. Most recipes call for boiling the shrimp, usually in water, for about 2 minutes. Mark Bittman's recipe in Cook's Illustrated (July 1997) suggested making a quick stock from the shells and then slowly steeping the shelled shrimp in this well flavored liquid. This turned out to be an excellent method although I did fiddle with the ingredient list. For the best flavor, I used a stock enhanced with parsley, tarragon, shallots, peppercorns, bay, white wine and a touch of lemon juice. Once the shrimp had been cooked, all recipes call for a water bath to arrest the cooking. Since I hated to rinse off a flavorful liquid with water, I skipped the cold water bath and used, instead, a freezer-chilled shallow baking dish. (A Pyrex rectangular baking dish or pie plate works well.) In a comparison test with shrimp that had been immediately plunged into a water bath, these shrimp were identical in texture but were clearly more flavorful.

Cocktail sauce is nothing new – it is a simple combination of ketchup or chili sauce, prepared horseradish, and lemon juice. Some other additions are chili powder, cayenne, Worcestershire sauce, and hot pepper sauce. Chili sauce (I liked Heinz just fine) was better than ketchup, the latter being darker, smoother, and more acidic. The chili sauce was brighter, a bit spicier, sweeter and had more texture. To one cup of chili sauce I added 2 1/2 teaspoons prepared horseradish—it can maybe be stretched to a tablespoon but any more takes away from the shrimp. (Remember to taste the cocktail sauce with the shrimp since you are aiming for a duet here, not a solo performance.) I found one tablespoon plus one teaspoon lemon juice was about right to balance the three main ingredients in the sauce. Chilis and chili powder were not welcome as was Worcestershire. Instead, I found a couple of dashes of Tabasco were a nice addition. Just a bit of salt and freshly ground pepper to round it off and the cocktail sauce was complete.

PERFECT SHRIMP-COCKTAIL

The stock can be saved and used with risotto, stovetop rice, or for braising fish steaks. You can purchase a 5-pound block of frozen shrimp, cut it into smaller pieces, and then place the pieces back in the freezer for later use. If you do not have all of the herbs on hand, don't let that stop you. The shrimp will turn out just fine.

1 1/2 pounds extra-large shrimp (16-20 count) peeled and deveined (the tail portion of the shell can be left on, if desired) shells reserved
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup dry white wine
1 small bay leaf
1 large or two medium shallots coarsely chopped
6 sprigs fresh parsley
1 sprig fresh tarragon
6 peppercorns
1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice

1. Bring reserved shells, 4 cups water and salt to a boil in a medium saucepan over high heat. Reduce heat to maintain a simmer, cover, and cook for 20 minutes. Strain, pressing on the shells to extract all liquid. Meanwhile place a shallow baking dish or pie plate in the freezer.

2. Place the shrimp stock in a medium saucepan (the diameter should be at least 8 inches) along with the wine, bay leaf, shallots, parsley, tarragon, peppercorns, and lemon juice and bring to a boil for two minutes. Turn off heat and stir in shrimp. Cover and steep for 10 minutes. Drain and place shrimp onto the chilled baking dish, cover with plastic wrap and refrigerate until well chilled. Serve with cocktail sauce. (See recipe below.)

Serves 4-6 as an appetizer.

COCKTAIL SAUCE

Heinz chili sauce works just fine with this recipe.

1 cup chili sauce such as Heinz
2 1/2 teaspoons to 1 tablespoon prepared horseradish, to taste
1 tablespoon plus 1 teaspoon fresh lemon juice
1/4 teaspoon salt
1 to 2 dashes hot pepper sauce such as Tabasco
Freshly ground black pepper

Stir all ingredients together and refrigerate until well chilled. Adjust seasonings and serve with prepared shrimp.

Use variegated foliages for season-long accents

Green thumbs up

Part 2

CORRESPONDENT

Several tiny, hovering forms dart about the garden, passing from flower to flower to sip sweet nectar from the abundant blossoms of bee balm, liatris, butterfly bush, and phlox. At first glance they appear to be bumble bees or perhaps half a dozen baby hummingbirds as they hang nearly motionless among the blooms. These fascinating little creatures are hummingbird moths, regular visitors to many of our gardens during the latter half of summer.

About half the size of our smallest hybrid, these two-inch, day-flying, clearwinged members of the sphinx moth family are buffy tan and burgundy. As they sip nectar from fragrant flowers with their long proboscis in hummingbird fashion, close inspection will reveal their pointed antennae and smaller size in comparison to their feathered counterpart. In caterpillar form, they tend to munch on viburnum, hawthorn, and honeysuckle, their green and white striped larva demonstrating the characteristic horn or tail associated with sphinx moths, the family to which the disgusting tomato hornworm belongs. High summer has arrived when these unique visitors make their appearance in our dens.

By midsummer, most gardeners settle in to the maintenance mode with the majority of digging, planting, and mulching complete. August is the month of weeding, watering and deadheading, although many of us still enjoy browsing through our local nurseries in our never-ending quest for just one more plant to fill a gap in the border. Summer vacations allow time to read all the back issues of horticultural magazines, look through catalogs and perhaps travel to more distant resources for that special, must-have, unique plant. With a little more time to really investigate and read labels, not to mention an occasional sale here and there, August is often the month when I have acquired some of my most unusual and satisfying plants. As in past seasons, I will be on the lookout for more variegated foliage plants to add sparkle and pizzazz to my borders, especially for those dimly lit corners of the shady garden. Last summer's acquisitions included several members of the Pulmonaria family, commonly known as lungworts. The species demonstrates large, coarse, hairy, silver spotted leaves with clusters of pink and blue flowers in springtime. Newer cultivars are more boldly marked with a greater diversity in flower color ranging from the typical blue and pink, to pure white, in addition to dazzling shades of raspberry and salmon. Pulmonaria "Excalibur" and P. "Majeste" demonstrate elegant, silvery leaves, a color often hard to find for the shady border, and P. "David Ward" is particularly unique with large, silvery, apple-green foliage bordered by a broad white band and stunning salmon flowers for several weeks in early spring. The devastating late frost took its toll on these handsome plants but they have slowly recovered d are beginning to look more robust as the season progresses. A moisture-retentive soil in dappled to moderate shade is essential for these hardy perennials to survive and thrive.

For a stunning addition to the back of the border, look for Fallopia japonica. This fairly recent introduction to the nursery trade seems to be equally adaptable to sun or shade given well-drained, moisture-retentive soils and the foliage is a knockout. Long stems, which may extend to four feet in length once established, display attractive, oval leaves splashed with white and hints of pink, red and coral, especially as the plant emerges in spring and again during the latter half of the growing season. Although the plant resembles a few invasive relatives, I have found it to be very restrained in growth and a must for the collector of variegated foliage plants. Perhaps one of the most adaptable variegated plants currently available, the five-leaf aralia (Acanthopanax or Eluthercoccus) has the look of an exotic house plant. Tolerant of poor soil and drought conditions with the added benefit of being deer proof, this shrubby, spiny perennial is clothed in divided green foliage with wide, creamy-white borders, which gives the appearance of being all white from a distance. It will reach a height of six feet at maturity and seems to thrive in sun or shade.

Another dazzler for the partially shaded border Persicaria "Painter's Palette" is a spectacular foliage plant which exhibits red-tinted stems and elliptical leaves heavily splashed with cream, white and red, highlighted by a dramatic red or bronze chevron in the center of each leaf. In late summer and early autumn, slender spikes of tiny, cherry-red flowers appear which then produce seed and often plentiful offspring in subsequent seasons. These can be easily extricated and eliminated, transplanted to other semi-shady locations or shared with friends, which is how I acquired my first treasured plant.

Some of these plants may require some searching should you wish to add them to your gardens. Local nurseries, especially those which offer a wide selection of perennials, may be a resource, but it may be necessary to seek the more unusual variegated plants through catalogs or more distant specialty nurseries. The quest and ultimate acquisition of hard to find plants is part of the satisfaction that passionate gardeners derive from their hobby.

Wildflower Festival in bloom

"A friend introduced me to Joni. She didn't have a recording contract at the time. I used two of Joni's songs on my Wildflowers album in 1967. One was 'Michael from Mountains' and the other, of course, was 'Both Sides Now.'

I cried the first time I heard it," Collins recalls of the song that became her (and Mitchell's) first Top 10 hit.

The Wildflowers album also marked the first time that Collins recorded her own songs, including "Since You've Asked," "Albatross" and "Sky Fell."

Collins and Mitchell again collaborated on the 1969 hit, "Chelsea Morning." Years later, Collins performed the song at the first Inaugural Gala for the President and Mrs. Bill Clinton in 1992. "I was honored and thrilled when I found out that it was the Clinton's favorite song and the inspiration for their daughter's name."

The singer's recording successes have not been limited to the folk genre. In 1975, she released the album 'Judith' which included the song "Send In The Clowns." Stephen Sondheim's wistful tale of regret first appeared in the Broadway musical "A Little Night Music" and had already been covered by a wide array of artists before Collins tackled it. "I was very glad that the song worked so well for me. I think of it as my lifetime companion," she says.

The author of two autobiographies, an original novel and a children's book — and now in her fifth decade as a performer — Collins still relishes the challenge of a new project. She recently started her own label, Wildflower Records.

"My label will represent a re-launching of my recording career. I now have the rights to six of my Elektra albums which aren't currently available. I released two new albums on Wildflower Records last year. This fall, we will release a double CD of my first two albums, "A Maid of Constant Sorrow' and 'Golden Apples of the Sun'. The label will also give me the opportunity to present good, new artists. I'm the entrepreneur now.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY,.AUGUST 1

A mixed bag of planetary influences makes for an interesting month. August begins with a full moon, Venus-Jupiter and Saturn-Pluto alignment. Pluto remains in high profile during the month and begins direct travel on August 23. Today the moon continues inactive travel in the business-oriented sign Capricorn. That means that you can be most productive, if you work on projects that need follow-up and finishing. Venus enters the sign Cancer at 8:18 a.m., remaining there until August 27. This period is ideal for family reunions and get-togethers.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 2

The combination of an inactive Capricorn moon and Mercury-Neptune opposition places all important signings or practical decisions off limits today. Artistic sensitivity and creativity run high. You can find fresh inspiration to finish jobs that have been left hanging or need problem-solving. Follow your intuition. Create or appreciate art, music, poetry.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 3

The final windup to the full moon begins at 1:53 a.m., when the moon enters Aquarius. In addition, seven major planetary alignments occur this weekend. A full moon intensifies physical energy and drives; its outcome can go either way. Resolve to be constructive, positive, lighthearted. Sleep doesn't come easily in full moon periods. If you are working, you can be most productive. On the other hand, this is a wonderful evening to dance, laugh and play.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 4

The full moon culminates at 1:56 a.m., 12-degrees of the sign Aquarius. Planetary lineups set the stage for a spectacular social weekend. Plan to visit or entertain friends. Let your hair down and enjoy life to the fullest. The green light is on for new starts, particularly in your personal life. Pull out all the stops. The sun forms a harmonious contact to Saturn at 5:33 p.m. and to Pluto at 7:31 p.m.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 5

Planetary action makes for another exciting day. Put domestic or business concerns on the back burner and go for the good times. Be more spontaneous and adventurous. The Aquarius moon becomes inactive at 12:52 a.m. until 2:30 p.m., when it enters Pisces. Mercury forms a harmonious alignment to Saturn at 7:11 a.m. and to Pluto at 7:27 a.m. The Saturn/Pluto opposition culminates at 1:03 p.m. The sun and Mercury conjoin at 5:51 p.m., and Venus aligns with Jupiter at 6:50 p.m.

MONDAY, AUGUST 6

After the barrage of planetary activity in the past few days, a Pisces moon offers an opportunity to relax and unwind. Pay attention to your intuition; follow your instincts. There is a rough spot, however, in effect between 2:00-5:15 p.m., when the moon aligns with Pluto and Saturn. Avoid emotional thunderstorms. Think before you do or say something you will later regret.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 7

At 1:39 a.m. the Pisces moon forms a challenging 90-degree contact to Mars and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. This moon travels at the tail end of the zodiac, and does not interact with planets. However, a harmonious alignment of Mercury and Mars saves the day, generating energy, enthusiasm. It means that you can be productive. Creative projects, especially writing, will take shape easily. On the other hand, this is not a time to launch important ventures. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action until tomorrow.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 8

At 3:05 a.m. the moon enters Aries, setting a quick pace today and tomorrow. The green light goes on for starting new enterprises. Go for the gold. Be sure to have a clear plan of action and stick to it, in order to avoid spinning your wheels. A lunar alignment to Jupiter at 2:27 p.m. warns against overdoing or going to extremes. Know your limits. A 90-degree contact of the moon to Venus may spark romantic fireworks this evening. Take a walk on the wild side.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 9

Gear up for a hectic day. The Aries moon forms six major alignments to planets, all harmonious. That means that you can be most productive, if you are well organized. Energy and enthusiasm run high. An applying polarity of Mercury to Uranus warns against impulsive spending or decision-making, however. Take it slow and think things through. Planetary action promises an exciting, 'anything can happen' kind of evening.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 10

Slow down, pay attention, drive with care this morning. The Aries moon becomes inactive at 12:53 a.m. Mercury forms a 180-degree alignment to Uranus at 10:58 a.m. Projects may take unexpected turns. Give greater attention to accuracy, details. Storm clouds move out at 2:23 p.m., when the moon enters earthy Taurus, and the green light for new starts goes on. A harmonious alignment of the sun and Mars occurs at 5:46 p.m. The evening is prime for all social activities, romantic adventures.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 11

A Taurus moon sets the stage for a relaxing weekend. It is best to start major ventures or make important purchases or decisions before 1:02 p.m., when the moon forms a harmonious contact to Venus. If you have work projects to accomplish, you can be most productive today. Influences are best, however, for kicking back and enjoying the good things in life.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 12

The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 3:53 a.m. This month's new moon will culminate next Saturday, August 18, at 28-degrees of Leo. Today the Taurus moon forms challenging 90-degree alignments to Uranus at 10:02 a.m. and Mercury at 6:32 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Don't get involved in power struggles with others; sidestep stubborn, obstinate behavior. Pursue favorite leisure activities; treat yourself to a day of rest and relaxation. At 10:59 p.m. the moon enters Gemini.

MONDAY, AUGUST 13

The combination of a Gemini moon and an applying sun/Uranus polarity sets a hectic pace today and tomorrow. Avoid rigid time schedules; things may not go as planned. It is better to handle a variety of jobs rather than one that demands mental precision and focus. People will be talkative and easily distracted from practical matters. Lunar alignments to Pluto and Saturn may generate emotional thunderstorms this evening. Keep it light. Choose your words carefully.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 14

The planet Mercury enters Virgo at 1:04 a.m., remaining there until August 31. This is an ideal time to focus on physical fitness, health, diet; start new programs to help you eliminate bad habits and take better care of yourself. A lunar alignment to Mars can make for a rough start to this day. Stop, look and listen. Don't take risks. Fortunately, storm clouds move out by 11:00 a.m. You can initiate projects between 11:00 a.m.-3:42 p.m., when the Gemini moon becomes inactive. This is an especially favorable period for communicating new ideas, launching sales and promotion campaigns.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 15

A polarity of the sun and Uranus warns you to expect the unexpected this morning. Allow extra time to get where you are going. Take it slow and easy. The moon enters the sign Cancer at 3:55 a.m., placing the focus on home, family, domestic responsibilities. The best period for launching important enterprises occurs between 12:30-3:50 p.m., when the moon aligns with expansive Jupiter. Share a special dinner with friends and loved ones this evening.

Police have game plan for youth mass arrests

Party host charged under new law

By Mary Ford and Rick Collins
MFORD@CNC.COM

Three Cohasset police cruisers, the police SUV and a paddy wagon from Weymouth ran a shuttle service from a house on Hillside Drive to the police station Saturday night to transport 32 teenagers and young adults being placed under arrest for alcohol offenses and disturbing the peace.

The 21-year-old party host also faces charges of furnishing alcohol to minors under the so-called "Social Host Responsibility" act – a state law that has its roots in a 1998 Cohasset-related tragedy involving under-age drinking.

"Our goal here is to keep kids alive, not to imprison them."
— Police Chief Brian Noonan

Police suspect that underage drinking at Saturday's party was also a factor in a single-vehicle accident on Beechwood Street.

"Our goal here is to keep kids alive, not to imprison them," said police chief Brian Noonan about the accident.

Police used the station's two garage bays as a holding area while each of the youths was booked, bailed and released to a responsible person.

"We've had over ten arrests at a time, a number of times," said Officer William Quigley. Last summer, police arrested more than 20 teens at two separate parties in a single weekend.

"We mark their names on Tupperware tubs for their personal belongings, so no one loses anything."

It all started at about 9 p.m. Saturday when police responded to reports of a loud, under-age house party on the small residential road off Beechwood Street, and ended with a mass arrest and arraignments at Quincy District Court on Monday.

Two of those arrested were from Cohasset, with the remainder from Abington Hull, Hingham, Norwell, Brockton and Commercial land vs. affordable housing?

Loss of industrial land on Route 3A feared

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Planning Board hopes the town's need for developable commercially-zoned land outweighs its need for affordable housing, and could be the basis upon which Cohasset could reject a proposed Chapter 40B comprehensive permit application along Route 3A.

Avalon Bay Communities is looking to build a 250-unit rental apartment complex at 155 King St., the 65-acre former Norfolk Conveyor site. If it is allowed to skirt local zoning laws and build the complex, it development would take up 17 percent of the commercially-zoned land in Cohasset — a fact that has town officials worried.

"Whether it be 40B affordable housing, or some wealthy fellow wanting to build starter mansions up there, I don't like getting rid of one of last little areas of industrial land we have left," said Planning Board chairman Al Moore.

"I don't like getting rid of one of last little areas of industrial land we have left."
— Planning Board chairman Al Moore.

Commercial property accounts for just 7 percent of Cohasset's tax base. Of the 384 total acres zoned for commercial development in town, 171 remain undeveloped. The proposed complex would eat up 38 percent of the remaining undeveloped commercial land in town.

Because Cohasset is so far below the state's 10 percent minimum requirement for affordable housing units, it has next to no leverage when it comes to denying a comprehensive permit. Under a comprehensive permit, a development can skirt local zoning laws, such as density and land-use, as long as the developer reserves at least 25-percent of the total units for affordable housing. Any decision made by the town Zoning Board of Appeals, which oversees the permitting process, can be appealed to the state Housing Appeals Committee.

As a result, the Planning Board recently asked town counsel whether the town could deny ABC's request for a comprehensive permit based on the grounds that it is "inconsistent with historic land-use

Duxbury woman takes over director's chair

By Mary Ford

Anyone who works closely with the South Shore Art Center knows Sarah Hannan.

The Duxbury resident just completed four years serving as program director there — a job that entailed a lot of organization, hundreds of hours of planning — and no doubt, its share of headaches.

But luckily for the art center, Hannan isn't moving on — she's moving up.

Last month, the board of directors at the popular non-profit organization appointed Hannan as the new executive director of the art center. She replaces former executive director Dillon Bustin, who left the post last winter.

Town, MBTA agree on right-of-way price tag

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen have agreed with the MBTA on a $1.6 million price-tag for the six-mile long, town-owned right-of-way that could house the Greenbush commuter rail line in the near future.

The board made the announcement Tuesday after calling a brief executive session to discuss the deal.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the amount was a fair split between the $1.1 million MBTA appraisal and $2.05 million town appraisal of the land. If the town and MBTA hadn't been able to come to an agreement, the recently signed mitigation agreement said a third, MBTA-approved appraiser would have had the final say.

The state is able to take the land by eminent domain, but is required to pay fair market-value for the land.

Haddad said the wide gap in the appraised value of the long-dormant railroad bed was the result of a disagreement in the amount of developable commercial land.

"That's really where the battle was," he said.

The MBTA had actually priced the amount per-square-foot at a higher rate than Cohasset: $15 per square foot, compared to the town's price of $12. However the town included 80,000 more square feet of developable land in its appraisal than was in the MBTA's. Haddad said the cost for residential land was "real close."

Haddad felt if it had come down to a third appraisal, the town would have not done as well.

The board voted unanimously 3-0 to accept the price. Board Chairman Fred Koed and Ronnie McMorris were not present at the meeting. Selectman Tom Callahan said he "reluctantly" voted to accept the price.

The $1.6 million sale price bumps the total value of the town's MBTA mitigation agreement, which it signed in May, to upwards of $6 million. It includes a $1.2 million reimbursement for the final phase of the James Brook Flood Control Project, backing of a $1.5 Public Works Economic Development grant, $500,000 for open space purchases, $250,000 to replace a well off Sohier Street, and a new town parking lot.

Callahan said the board has not yet decided what to do with the money, if the train comes, but added that a number of town groups have already inquired about it.

Greenbush, which has been mired in controversy, is the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad Restoration project and could start service in 2004, officials say. The Plymouth and Middleboro lines opened in 1997.

Speedy selectmen

There were just a few good selectmen at Tuesday night's board meeting. Both chairman Fred Koed and Ronnie McMorris were absent, leaving vice-chairman Michael Sullivan, Merle Brown and Thomas Callahan to do the town's work. Sullivan filled in behind the gavel and, much to the delight of those who turned out on the sweltering night, adjourned the meeting by 9:15 p.m.

Woodside Cemetery

The town Veterans' Committee will dedicate the expanded Woodside Cemetery and new Gold Star Mothers Memorial on Nov. 11, Veteran's Day, at 1 p.m. Committee chairman Glenn Pratt asked selectmen to lower all town flags to half-staff on the day.

Lambert's Lane

Responding to residents' concerns of speeders along Lambert's Lane, police have stepped up patrols along the narrow private way leading up to the Cohasset Golf Club. Town Manager Mark Haddad has also asked the Norfolk County Board of Engineers to set up a traffic study along the road. An informal monitoring by police recorded an average speed of 25 miles per hour. The road's speed limit is posted at 15 m.p.h. The town Department of Public Works has also ordered a "Dangerous Road" sign as an effort to thwart people from speeding.

Haddad also complimented the golf club for addressing the speeding problem. It has posted reminders to pay attention to the speed limit on its receipts, slips to vendors, and memos to employees.

"The golf course has gone above and beyond," said Haddad.

Selectmen Thomas Callahan said the club should be "commended" for its efforts.

School construction

Town Manager Mark Hadadd said, aside from normal construction problems, the school construction projects are proceeding on schedule.

"Knock on wood," he added, rapping his desk.

He said contractors have run into a few unexpected issues during the beginning stages of the renovation project, but nothing of any magnitude that would delay the project.

Haddad is also confident that contractors removing asbestos from the Deer Hill and middle/high school will be finished in time for the school year.

"Everything is going really smoothly," he said.

Summer heat

Selectmen Michael Sullivan, filling in as board chairman for Fred Koed, urged residents to check on any elderly neighbors during the ongoing heat wave.

"Heat can be just as severe as the cold," he said.

The mercury hit 90 for the third day in a row Wednesday, and is expected to remain as high until the weekend.

"Just check on your neighbors and make sure they're dealing with the heat OK," he said.

Neighborhood forums

The town Growth & Development Committee will hold two more neighborhood forums in an effort to gain resident input for the master plan process. Tonight, the committee will meet at St. Anthony's Church Parish Hall at 7:30 p.m. Next Thursday, Aug. 16, the committee will meet at Nativity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church. All residents are welcome.

Sidewalk by St. Stephen's

At the request of selectmen, engineers for the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation and Village Revitalization Task Force have marked where the curb line of the St. Stephen's sidewalk along South Main Street, would be.

The bright orange marks are located two to three feet behind the white fog line, much to the surprise of selectmen who were concerned the sidewalk would constrict an already narrow street.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said he was "surprised" by the marks location.

"It gives us some flexibility," said Selectmen Thomas Callahan.

The VRTF-approved plan calls for between three and four feet of ledge to be removed for the sidewalk.

The town approved the idea for a sidewalk along the granite ledge at a 1998 Town Meeting. The state has already awarded a $170,000 grant for the project. Selectmen urge residents to contact them with any feedback on the markings.

Hingham Lumber awaits ZBA nod

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Calling it a "great use for the site," the Planning Board last week approved Hingham Lumber's plan to move its 53-year old operation to Route 3A in Cohasset where the former golf driving range was located.

Now, lumberyard owners Tom and John McNulty's focus shifts toward the town Zoning Board of Appeals, as they await its ruling on two needed variances. The board met Monday night but hadn't had time to read over a draft ruling and delayed deliberations for two weeks.

The lumberyard needs two variances from the ZBA: one for the number of parking spaces and a second for a corner of the main sales building which encroaches into a flood zone.

When completed, the lumberyard will be a one-of-its kind facility in the area, with a 60,000 square foot drive-through warehouse for easier pickups of building supplies, and a 24,000-square-foot main showroom and retail store. Plans call for a total of 210 parking spaces with 170 spaces in front and behind the main showroom building, and 40 more inside the warehouse.

After continuing the plan's public hearing into a second night last Wednesday, the Planning Board quickly approved the site plan, asking only for an increase in the amount of landscaping, particularly between Route 3A and the front parking lot. The parking lot and showroom building will sit approximately four feet higher than Route 3A.

"There will be an awful lot of cars of Route 3A looking up at undercarriages instead of that nice building," said board member Bill Good. "That just doesn't do justice to all the hard work you've put into this plan. There just has to be something so you don't look smack dab into grills and bumpers all day."

Plan engineer Bill Buckley said he would add landscaping to the stretch of green space between the parking lot and Route 3A.

The board also recommended that Hingham Lumber bury as much of the utility wires going across Route3A to the rear of the building as possible.

The 13.4 acre parcel is owned by Crocker Realty Trust and had been considered as a possible expansion area for the neighboring Cohasset Heights Landfill. The Planning Board was thrilled that the new business would put and end to any potential landfill expansion on that site. Board member Peter Pratt said the plan would both take that option "right off the table" as well as add to the town's tiny commercial tax base. Just 7 percent of Cohasset's tax revenues are derived from commercial property.

Board member Chris Ford said if a Home Depot or Lowe's-type mega-facility had applied for the site, the board may not have been so welcoming. "Hingham Lumber is a known entity, we know their operating style and it's just going to be welcomed into the community," he said.

Board Chairman Al Moore called the site an "attractive nuisance" because of its potential to have attracted "the wrong sorts" of businesses to the area due to its prominent location. "As soon as we get something put to bed for that site, all the better," he said, calling the Hingham lumber proposal a "very good application."

McNulty told the Planning Board that provided it receives the ZBA's blessing, the business should be up and running at its new location, adjacent to Cohasset Collision, by fall 2002.

McNulty, who recently went through a long permitting process with the Hingham Zoning Board of Appeals over a now-abandoned plan to expand, said he would "reserve judgement" on the move until he had received a final approval.

Police investigating CHS coach charged in N.H.

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset Police say they are looking into additional incidents involving a Cohasset High School coach who was charged last week with inappropriately touching two young males at a popular overnight basketball camp in Henniker, N.H.

Lowell Mark Hall, 34, of Quincy, who is also a special education instructor in the school system and helps coach basketball and football, pleaded not guilty to two counts of misdemeanor unlawful touching and two counts of assault Thursday in Henniker District Court. The alleged incidents happened at the "Satch" Sanders Basketball Camp held on the campus of New England College.

Police Chief Brian Noonan confirmed that local police are investigating reports of inappropriate behavior involving Hall and Cohasset High School students.

"I've assigned Det. Rick Grassie and our sexual assault officer Shellee Peters to investigate reports of incidents that have occurred here," he said.

Noonan said so far the department has not found any incidents that reached the level of sexual assault, calling most cases of "inappropriate talk."

New Hampshire Police notified Grassie of Hall's arrest last week. Grassie said he has asked the school department for information regarding Hall and any complaints about his behavior.

Schools Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey, middle/high school Principal Dr. Michael Jones, assistant Principal Jack DeLorenzo, school Health Director Dr. Michael Gill, and Athletic Director Ron Ford were all on vacation this week and unavailable for comment. Grassie expects to discuss the case with school officials later this week.

Although the department has not received any formal complaints against Hall, Grassie has been advised to be ready.

"The Norfolk County District Attorney's sex crime unit feels there's a very good possibility that when this fully comes around and is fully made public that there could be additional people coming forward," he said.

According to Henniker Police Chief Tim Russell, Hall went into the rooms of two male campers on Sunday, July 29, the first night of the camp, at approximately 10:15 p.m. At around 10:30, Hall allegedly touched one of the males in the buttocks and groin area, and wrapped his arms around the other boy from behind, picked him up and shook him as if he was "trying to crack his back."

Both teens are under 16 and from Massachusetts. Russell said one of the boys had been attending the camp for four years and was familiar with Hall, who has been an instructor there for 10 years.

The teens immediately reported the incident to another counselor on the floor. Hall was fired from the camp, and escorted off the campus.

He was released on $25,000 personal recognizance. Because Hall is a Massachusetts resident, he also had to sign an extradition form. He was ordered not to have any unsupervised contact with a child under the age of 18. A trial date of Oct. 10 has been set. If convicted, he could face up to a year in jail for each count.

Russell said the basketball camp, run by former Boston Celtics great Tom "Satch" Sanders, is very popular and attracts girls and boys ages 8 to 18 from all over the country.

"It's very reputable and very well run," he said. "I've sent my own children to this camp."

Russell said this is the first problem he has heard of at the camp.

"It's been held on and off in Henniker for 15 years, but mostly here and we've never had any issues with the camp or with the administration," he said. "It's very unfortunate."

Russell also said he was "so glad" the boys reported the incident quickly.

School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo said any disciplinary action against Hall will be taken after a full investigation by Jones and Malvey.

As the parent of two boys, DeGiacomo said the allegations have struck home.

"I think all parents have to be concerned when accusations are made of this nature," he said.

HOT, HOT, HOT

Hello Cohasset. Feeling Hot, Hot, Hot is the phrase for this week. I love the heat but the humidity has got to go. Make sure to stay cool, try to keep your hot moods in check (easier said than done as I am finding out) and hit the pool or beach. As I am sure everyone is doing, drink a lot of water as well and load up on sunscreen. Other than that, just sweat it out.

BIRTHDAY WISHES

Happy Birthday to our sweet niece, Kati Piepenbrink, this week as she is turning six years old! Kati, I know we are going to have a really fun time jumping and splashing, we can't wait. Also celebrating her birthday is Melinda Diguam, a very special little lady in my life. Melinda is turning seven on August 12! Enjoy the day, Cutie! We all love you very much.

MILTON STAR

Kate E. Henderson graduated from Milton Academy in June and was granted a "Diploma with Distinction." Kate was elected into Milton Academy's Chapter of the Cum Laude Society for High Academic Achievement. On Milton Academy's Prize Day, Kate was awarded the school's science prize for outstanding ability in physics, chemistry and biology over four years. As captain of Milton's women's volleyball team, she received the team "MVP" and the "all-league" award. Kate is the daughter of very proud parents, Jane and David Henderson, and will be attending Brown University. Congratulations Kate!

XAVERIAN HONORS

John M. Dwyer, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Dwyer, earned second honors for the third marking period at Xaverian Brothers High School in Westwood. Students who earn grades of 80 or above in all courses are bestowed with second honors. Great job, John.

MARKETING MAJORS

Bryant College had two Cohasset students to tell us about. Elizabeth A. Mahoney and Chad W. Whitman, both earned bachelor of science degrees with a marketing concentration this past spring. Bryant College in Smithfield, RI has a 138-year tradition as a premier business college. Congratulations to both of you.

FARMER'S MARKET

I am sure that many of you have had the chance to attend Cohasset's Farmers Market on the Common held every Thursday from 2:30-6:30 p.m. If you haven't been able to get there yet, you really should. Because of all the hard work from the vendors, sponsors and most importantly, the volunteers, this market was recently voted as "The Best (Farmstand) of Boston" by this month's Boston Magazine. This market is a great example of what can be done with community support from every angle. You can come down with your family, meet friends, dance and mingle and purchase some wonderful food and items and best of all, it is a hop, skip and a jump away! There is produce, pottery, crafts and baked goods from so many fantastic Vendors and more are always welcome. Come on and enjoy a Thursday afternoon on the Common! It is worth it.

WALKING ADVENTURE

Brad Ketchum, a former Cohasset resident, wrote to me recently about his recent adventure. As the founding editor of The Walking Magazine back in 1986, Brad became interested in long-distance multi-day walks organized by European and Japanese walking organizations. Within three years, he chalked up walks in six countries to become the first American to earn the International Walker Medal. Last week he completed the "super bowl of all international walks, the 85th Vierdaagse (four-day walk) in Nijmegan, Holland. Stepping off with 38,000 other walkers from 21 nations, he tramped through the Dutch countryside for more than 100 miles in 4 days! Despite the event's "worst weather in 38 years", some 34,000 walkers completed the course to earn the coveted Vierdaagsekruis or, THE GOLD MEDAL! Among them was Brad, currently working as the editorial director of Inc. Business Resources. This is a great accomplishment Brad; it was so great to hear from you and be able to let Cohasset know what you have been up to. Please let us know when you do some more of these great walks.

That is all for this week. Make sure to send me all your news, celebrations, photos and upcoming events in one of the following ways:

NOBLES GRADS

Noble and Greenough in Dedham also had some Cohasset graduates. Ted Lubitz, son of Ed and Kyle Lubitz received his diploma and has plans to attend Trinity College. Meghan O'Sullivan, daughter of Jere and Betty O'Sullivan also received her diploma and plans on attending American University. The school purchased a photograph by Meghan through the Bramhall-Bridge Purchase Prize for Excellence in the Visual Arts. Mickey Palone, son of Michael and Margaret Palone graduated with distinction and plans to attend Georgetown University. I am sure we will hear great things in the future in regards to you all. Best of Luck.

Picnic, auction

The Cohasset Historical Society announces an "Olde Fashioned Picnic Basket Auction," fundraising event, Sept. 8 at 1 p.m. at the Lothrop House at 14 Summer St.

Bring a creative picnic lunch for two to be auctioned off to the highest bidder. Then join the festivities by successfully bidding on and enjoying the picnic lunch of your choice. Suggestions include:

- In addition to lunch, customize your basket with an enticing extra, such as gift certificates, lottery tickets, free lessons, specialty items. The more creative the basket, the bigger the donation to the historical society.
- Basket essentials: appetizers /soup, sandwiches, munchies (veggies, chips), salad (pasta, Caesar, fruit), dessert, disposable utensils, dishes, napkins.
- Attach a note to the outside of your basket. Specify your basket's menu items and any special features so that the auctioneer can "sell" its virtues to the audience.
- Bring a blanket or lawn chair.
- Beverages will be provided by the society.

Don't forget, this is a fund-raiser — the more attractive the basket, the higher the bidding will go.

For reservations and information, call Tam Elliott, 781-383-2169; Barbara Elliott, 781-383-1154; or Kathy O'Malley, 781-383-9765.

George Matthew Jr., carillonneur of Middlebury College and Norwich University in Vermont, will play the eighth and final recital in the current series of weekly programs on the 57-bell Cohasset Carillon at St. Stephen Church in Cohasset Sunday, Aug. 19, at 6 p.m. His program will include carillon compositions by Franz Vos, Edmons De Vos, Daniel Schroyens and Robert Starer, settings of Danish folk songs, a transcription of a suite by Enrique Granados and "Pastime Rag #5" by Artie Matthews.

The hour-long recital is free of charge and will take place rain or shine. In case of rain you may listen from your parked cars. Printed programs, recital schedules and brochures describing the Cohasset Carillon will be available in the program stand by the church courtyard on Highland Avenue, and will also be distributed on the Common and at the entrance to Stagecoach Way (the pedestrian walk beside Hunneman Realty on Main Street). Listeners are invited to bring picnic suppers, blankets and lawn chairs. Following the recital a brief tour of the tower and carillon will be offered to all interested persons.

Cohasset men share their love of sailing

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Whether it's a leisurely cruise out of Cohasset Harbor on a sunny Saturday afternoon, or one whipping across the water at speeds up to 15 knots, one thing is common along sailors — they love the sport.

Jim Hamilton of King Street, and Sam Wakeman of Jerusalem Road, both own sailboats, and both tie up at the Cohasset Yacht Club. But both men enjoy their boats differently.

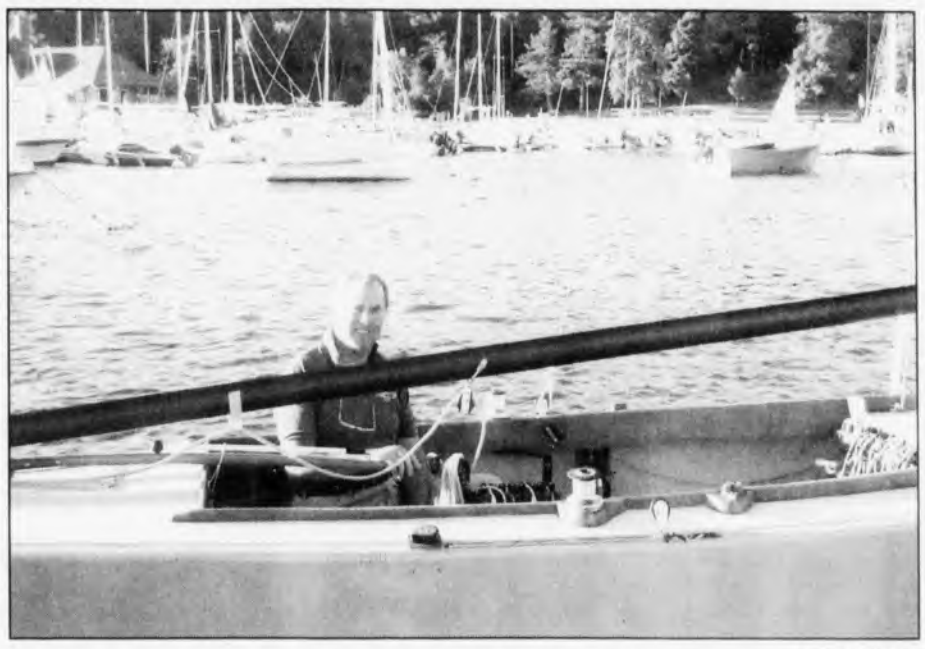
Hamilton, perhaps better known as the Cohasset Mariner cartoonist, used to race, but now enjoys sailing his 32-foot sloop, Max, at a slower pace.

"Boating is boating, for me it's a casual avocation," he said.

Hamilton has sailed up and down the New England coast, from Stonington, Conn., to the rocky shores of Maine.

He learned how to sail at the Plymouth Yacht Club at the age of 10, using a small boat called a Duxbury Duck.

"We'd learn with an instructor, same as they do here [at the Cohasset Yacht Club], and then race," he said.



"I lived in Plymouth, and when you live next to the sea, you might as well take advantage of it," Hamilton said. "It's also a great program for a kid."

Hamilton owns Max with two other partners — in fact he said every boat he's owned he had a partner.

"From the Duxbury Duck to a little sailing Mercury I owned in Plymouth harbor," he said. He also owned a 22-foot Ensign racing boat before entering into a partnership with Max.

Hamilton did crew on a couple of 210s, a regionally popular 30-foot racing boat, with a flat bottom, and long keel that requires a three-man crew to sail. The 210 class, popularized in the 1950s, are found almost exclusively along the New England coast and in the Great Lakes region of the Midwest. The National Championships were held off the Cohasset coast in 1999.

"They're not set up for casual sailing," Hamilton said of the boats. "People that own those are extremely competitive."

Sam Wakeman grew up learning how to sail in Cohasset waters from the time he was four.

Competitive racing

Hamilton means they're set up for people like Wakeman, no stranger to fast speeds and competitive racing.

The life-long Cohasset resident helped run successful America's Cup campaigns as a crew member on the Intrepid in 1967, and Courageous in 1974. He has since downgraded to the 210-class, where he won the National Championship in 1972 off the Falmouth Coast.

In the right conditions, a 210 can cut through the water at between 15-18 knots. "And that's bordering on the edge of out of control," Wakeman said, adding with a smile, "which I like anyway."

"I like the challenge of making a boat sail up to its potential," he said about racing. "I also like the tactical challenge...You have to understand the boat, yourself, the sails, the conditions your competitors."

He said he enjoys "just sailing," as long as he is "sailing well."

Wakeman grew up learning how to sail in Cohasset waters from the time he was four.

His parents were skilled sailors and helped him get a position on the America's Cup boat Easterner in 1964. Along with the two winners, he also was on the crew of Valiant in 1970.

Wakeman said one of the reasons he likes sailing is the bond with the crew. "What sticks with you is the relationship you have with the crew, working all summer and getting the boat to a very high level of efficiency, where you don't have to say one word and everything goes flawlessly," he explained. "It's like a really good football team, working as one unit."

Although he has started to slide away from the competitive racing circuit, he occasionally takes part on his son Wiley's crew.

"Occasionally he'll let me drive," he said with a smile. "But I'm trying to encourage the younger generation."

Neither Hamilton or Wakeman get out as much as they would like to, but don't seem to mind.

"This has been a bit of an off-season for me," said Hamilton who hasn't been out since the beginning of July. "We've really been working on the boat, spending the summer to get her to look good."

Wakeman said he's become involved with "too many other things," but still relishes a chance to "go out and bang around the course."

The Cohasset Yacht Club has historically been a fertile breeding ground for champion sailors — particularly women. Wakeman's mother, Frances, won the National Sailing Championships four years in a row in the 1930's, a feat that has not been accomplished since. Ruth Sears, another Cohasset resident, won the championships twice in the 1920s. Gregg Bemis, according to Wakeman, a former yacht club commodore in the mid 1980s, "wrote the rule book" on yacht racing in the 1960's. The club has also had a number of 210 National Champs. This years competition will be held the week of Aug. 20 out of the South Boston Yacht Club.

Sailing club sees rise in participants

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The lack of rainy days and big, coastal storms this summer had helped translate into a successful boating season, particularly for the Cohasset Sailing Club.

Commodore Bob Deutsch reports a significant increase in certain areas of the club's programs. Participation in the Sunday Stanton Series has tripled this summer, and adult sailing classes have seen their numbers swell by a third. He also said the junior high sailing program has also seen a lot of growth.

"I feel very happy about the way this year has gone," said Deutsch, in his first year at the helm of the club.

He said 34 members have taken beginner-level adult sailing classes this year, and a number have moved up to the intermediate level.

"It's putting some planning issues in front of us in terms of upgrading the boats and the equipment," Deutsch said. "But those are good problems, wonderful problems to have."

He said the sailing club is taking on a community-sailing program feel to it, similar to the community boating program run in Boston on the Charles River, of which he is a former member.

"We have a lot of changes going on, we're really trying to bend over backwards to become user-friendly for the community," he said.

Deutsch pointed to the club's new Web site, and improvement in communication with the community as partial reasons for the increase in participation.

"People see us as up and coming, and we try to let the public know what we're doing," he said.

Contestants in the Stanton Series intergenerational races, where the parents are the crew and kids are at the helm, has consistently averaged around eight teams, and Deutsch expects that number to grow in upcoming seasons.

The club, which counts 230 members in its ranks, has made two changes this year. It now requires members to pass a helmsman test before taking a boat out on the water.

"I was heartened to see people took it seriously without complaining," he said. "The test can really give a sense of accomplishment.

The club also introduced a comprehensive water safety policy for its staff, covering incidents such as injuries on the water, and capsized boats.

"This way the staff knows what the club's policy and procedures are, and there isn't any second guessing," he said.

Deutsch said this year's staff has "really gelled," with a combination of returning members, and supervisor Torin Sweeney, a teacher in the Cohasset school system.

"What I found valuable about Torin is that he knows the kids. He's admitted to not being a sailor by trade, but he's a kid-person and he can manage a staff," said Deutsch. "The high school kids we have had on staff have really started to mature."

The kids' boating season ends on Aug. 26, but the club's docks won't be pulled out of the water until Columbus Day, he said. Over the winter, Deutsch expects the club to get involved in more fundraising efforts in order to buy newer, more advanced equipment. Right now the club owns 11 mercurys, four 420s, eight turnabouts, two lasers and three safety boats.

He said anyone who is a Cohasset resident can join the Cohasset Sailing Club. The yearly membership rate is $135, and all residents have to do is pass a swimming test.

"We don't anyone out on the water who can't swim," he said.

OPINION

What's wrong with this picture?

Down the road in Hingham there's a full-time DARE officer at the middle school, and starting in September a resource police officer will be assigned to Hingham High.

Part of the duties of Hingham Officer Kris Phillips, who will serve as the resource officer, will be to conduct the junior student police academy at HHS where he will also be a supportive influence.

Hingham's DARE officer Mike Peraino, a Cohasset resident, and DARE officer Dom D'Arcangelo in neighboring Scituate have be able to build a bond with students and parents over the years that goes way beyond the standard DARE curriculum.

It's no secret that Cohasset Schools don't have DARE and Cohasset's tailor-made program, PALS [Police Assisting Local Schools], has all but disappeared from the scene.

And efforts to start a Citizens Police Academy here [Hingham is currently taking enrollment for its 11th class] have stalled from lack of interest.

Although the mass arrests this weekend involved just a few Cohasset young people — the under-age drinking party and resulting rollover accident that could have ended in tragedy - both took place right here in town.

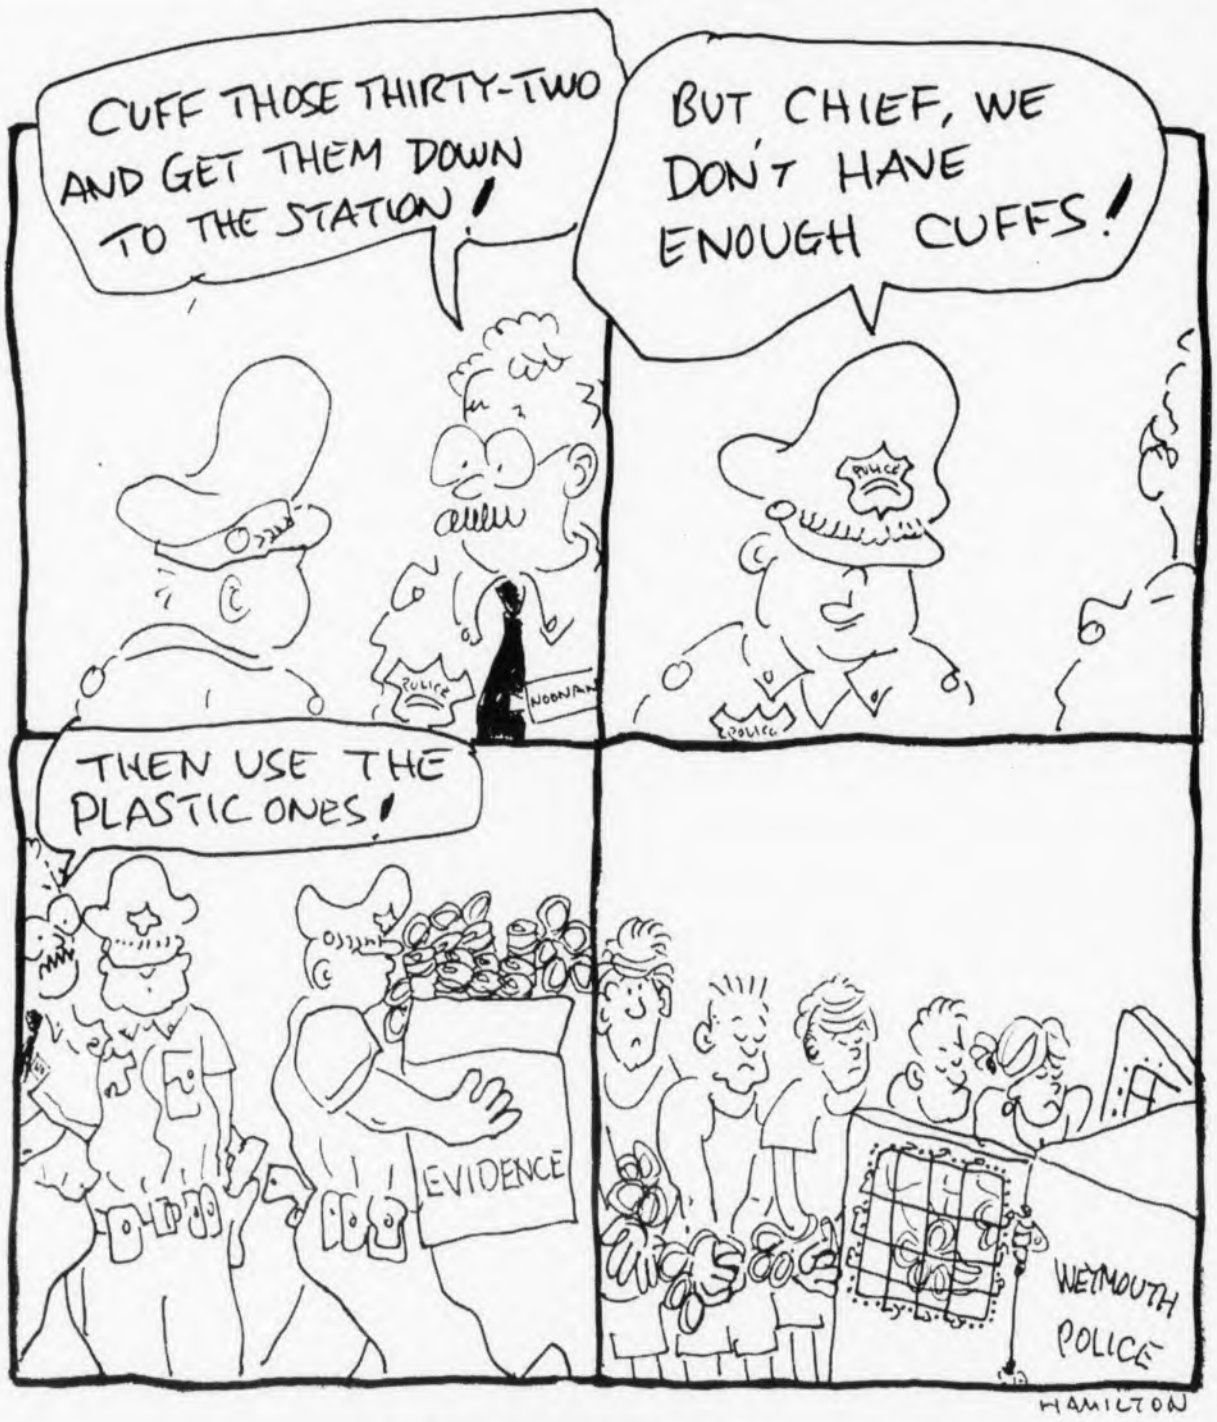
Despite numbers that might overwhelm much larger departments, Cohasset police have worked out a smooth system of dealing with group arrests through experience. Saturday night, the 32 youths were shuttled to the station in police cruisers, the police SUV and a paddy wagon on loan from Weymouth. They were put in the garage bays at the station as a holding area — then, like an assembly line — each was booked, bailed and released to a parent or other responsible person.

The picture it paints is almost funny, if it weren't so sad because the combustible combination of teenagers and alcohol will inevitably lead to heartbreak.

Some in town might say Saturday's fiasco was another example of over-zealous cops who are "out to get the kids." Those same people, we believe, want a baby-sitting service, not a police department, and wonder why each minor at the party wasn't escorted home without further incident.

Cohasset police afforded us the opportunity this week to conduct a one-on-one Citizens Police Academy by allowing reporter Rick Collins to take a ride around for several hours Friday night.

What he saw firsthand are officers who are dedicated to a job that isn't always fun, almost never glamorous and very often dangerous. Yet, they all chose to become cops because public safety is important to them and because at the very least, they thought they would be respected by the community they serve.



So what's wrong with this picture?

It's time for leadership from the Selectmen and School Committee to lobby for a consistent program, like DARE, to get the police into our schools — not as security guards but as professionals who have a lot to share and who can provide a valuable resource. As an added bonus, DARE programs are often funded through grants and private donations — not by the taxpayers.

Certainly for a town with as many smart people as Cohasset has — getting a positive police-student program underway is not rocket science.

If Scituate, Hingham and numerous other towns can do it — why can't we?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Privileged kids

TO THE EDITOR:

While I have been greatly entertained by the recent letters regarding the unfortunate plight of Cohasset teenagers, I am also greatly dismayed.

I just can't seem to muster up much sympathy for some of the most privileged kids in the entire world!! Wow! Nothing to do in Cohasset! What are you looking for? Should we fork over some giant bucks to build a special sports/entertainment complex for you in the center of town? Help me here.

Don't most kids in Cohasset have $500 plus bikes, ownership of or access to beautiful cars, gorgeous homes complete with family or recreation rooms filled with the finest entertainment systems – big screen TVs, VCRs, Nintendo, stereos, etc? Don't many of these kids' families own boats? Have I missed something? Does the South Shore not have miles of beautiful beaches, breathtaking scenery, gobs of restaurants, several movie theatres near by?

There are children all over Boston, the state, the country and the world who cannot even go outside because of crime in the streets, who have no access to a fraction of what teenagers in poor Cohasset have.

Here's a thought. Invite some of your friends over. Talk to them. Listen to music, play poker, watch a movie. Gee, if you're sick of watching movies, you can probably make a movie with a pretty simple camcorder and an ounce of creativity. Meet some friends on the beach, make a campfire, cook a meal over the coals.

If there is nothing to do but drink booze and smoke a little reefer, than frankly it doesn't matter where you live. Thanks for letting me vent.

Sidewalks, parking

TO THE EDITOR:

The following comments are offered in reference to the recommendations made by the Village Revitalization Task Force.

Create five additional parking spaces on Depot Court: I do not feel that the present angle parking configuration should be changed. A change of the angle parking to the north side of Depot Court would necessitate the removal of the traffic island at the intersection of Depot Court and Main Street. This traffic island is a "traffic calming" measure and serves to channel traffic from North or South Main Street into the westbound lane of Depot Court. It also offers pedestrians a safe harbor while they are crossing Depot Court. Removal of the island will lead to drivers making faster and wider turns into Depot Court.

In addition, the present configuration affords drivers, who are slowing down for the intersection, a longer time to assess the situation of the angle parked cars and passengers getting out of the cars. Many of these cars are driven by parents bringing little children to the nursery school or gymnastic classes at the community center. There is a lot of hubbub associated with this process. Conversely, if the angle parking is moved to the north side of Depot Court, drivers will not have ample time to observe the angle parked cars and children exiting the cars and will be in the process of speeding up.

If a car or two cars are backing out of the present parking spaces traffic is only backed up in Depot Court; shift the parking to the other side and traffic might be backed up into North or South Main streets, which might have some effect on emergency vehicles.

Finally, a shift of the angle parking will adversely effect the visibility for pedestrians, again mainly parents and little children, crossing in the cross-walk from the community center to the sidewalk at Dramatic Kitchens and of drivers exiting the center's parking lot.

All in all, I think that the present configuration is a much safer situation.

Install a sidewalk on Ripley Road alongside the "Ford Building opposite the post office: I don't see what this would accomplish. I think this sidewalk is designed to "create a landing zone" for the present crosswalk. I would suggest that it would be simpler and cheaper to move the crosswalk, perhaps to line up with the entrance to the "Ford Building." If a sidewalk is installed at Constitution Park perhaps it would be in order to have another crosswalk to the building at 107-117 Ripley Road.

Sidewalk on South Main St. at Saint Stephen's: I would reiterate my belief that this area is a very dangerous place to walk because the traffic is too close to any pedestrians. Installing a 6-inch curb is not going to make much difference. From comments made at the Selectmen's meeting of July 24, I would bet that the removal of ledge will necessitate blasting which was not supposed to be necessary. There have been references to "rolling sidewalks" at many of the meetings held by the Revitalization Task Force. In essence, these are walking areas constructed of materials which allow drivers to encroach on the areas and alert pedestrians that this might not be the safest place to be walking. Does this sound like the present situation? There is a "rolling sidewalk" proposed for the north side of Brook Street. It would seem to be the perfect solution for this area of South Main Street and would be a lot simpler and cheaper than blasting out ledge and installing a curb and sidewalk for $170,000.

Cohasset is now 'Housing Certified'

Rep. Garrett J. Bradley and Sen. Robert L. Hedlund along with the Massachusetts Department of Housing and Community Development (DHCD) announce Cohasset is "Housing Certified" under Executive Order 418 for the period ending June 30, 2002. Cohasset is now recognized as certified after the town has taken measures to improve housing in the community. This certification will allow Cohasset to receive discretionary grant funds that are only available to certified towns and will make it easier for the town to receive regular grants through a point system. The department uses this point system when deciding where funds are should directed.

Cohasset received this certification by fulfilling the 14 Proactive Step requirements outlined by the DHCD. These steps encourage housing for individuals across a broad range of incomes. The Town Planner, the Town Manager, the Building Inspector, the Board of Health, the Board of Selectmen, the Sewer Commission, the Senior Housing Committee, the Housing Authority, the Zoning Board of Appeals, and the Planning Board, were all cited by the DHCD as having taken very important steps to ensure that their community is open to all kinds of people, regardless of income. Among other things, they have made it economically feasible for developers to build low-income housing by lowering restrictions. They have also made housing issues a priority by participating in regional housing partnerships and hiring a full-time planner to work on housing issues. The town has located municipally owned or controlled land with the purpose of building lower-income housing, and they have increased funding for housing rehabilitation.

A day in the nightlife of Cohasset cops

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Like most boys, becoming a police officer is something I dreamed about growing up. But, not only have I not become one, I of the clean rap sheet, had never really seen one on duty behind the scenes – until Friday night.

That's when I jumped at the chance of being able to spend a few hours riding around with officers in the Cohasset Police Department — to be able to see a night in the life of a police officer, to experience what they do when a call comes over the radio ranging from a fight in progress to a possible trespasser in someone's yard.

10 p.m.

Despite a heavy downpour, and vivid ground-to-cloud lightning, Cohasset was quiet: no fires, no car accidents, no power lines down. The dispatcher on duty was watching a small television to keep himself occupied.

I followed Officer William Quigley out to his squad car – 757 – moved a bag full of law books onto the back seat ("You never know when you're going to have a question on the law," Quigley said) and took a seat in the front amidst a console full of radios and controls.

He showed me all the bells and whistles of the car, such as a red interior light to maintain night vision, and a 2-way, 100-channel radio that could also pick up signals from the surrounding South Shore towns. A separate panel controlled the numerous squad car lights, its alley spotlights, different flashing lights, different siren noises. A shotgun hung behind our heads, held firmly in place by an electronic lock.

As we started down Elm Street towards the common, Quigley, who is president of the Cohasset Police Association, said the department had recently filed for a $136,000 federal COPS that would help the town update the vehicle's computer systems. With the new system, police officers would be able to run license plates, check for warrants, and file reports, all from their car.

"It would really eliminate the need for us to return to the station house, except to book prisoners," Quigley said. "It would take a lot of pressure off the dispatchers, their hands can get really full."

On this night, Quigley was on duty along with Officer Jeffery Treanor, and Det. Rick Grassie. Det. Gregory Lennon was in the station doing some work. Two special officers were posted at the South Shore Music Circus where comedienne/lecturer Loretta LaRoche was entertaining.

Quigley's job for the evening was to patrol the town west of North Main Street. We headed down Route 3A and turned around once we hit the Scituate border.

Quigley, the grandson of a Boston cop, has been a Cohasset town employee for more than a decade. After graduating from Hingham High School in 1987, he was a special officer in Boston and then was Cohasset's Animal Control Officer until 1995 when he was hired as a full-time police officer.

"We have to make sure no one is parked helping themselves," he said glancing at the row of businesses along Route 3A.

At roll call earlier that evening, he had been advised to pay special attention to the town's three pharmacies in response to the recent rash of OxyCotin robberies in the state.

"You just have to be always looking," he said as he pulled in behind Tedeschi Plaza. "After a feeling you just get a feeling when something isn't right."

10:09 p.m.

Moments later, Quigley spied two teens standing outside of a car parked in the rear corner of Shaw's Plaza.

"See that? He's got something in his hand," Quigley said as he quickly pulled in behind the brown GMC Jimmy.

One teen male threw what was in his hand into some tall weeds. The other was relieving himself in the parking lot.

Quigley walked over to the car, and took a quick look inside. He saw an open 30-pack of Coors Light, smelled the distinctive scent of marijuana, and immediately called for back-up.

Grassie and Treanor arrived minutes later, and three males and one female, all from Westwood, were quietly arrested for being minors in possession of alcohol. One of the males was also charged with possession of a Class D substance.

Treanor grew up in Cohasset and has been a police officer since 1993.

"It's sometimes more difficult working in the town you grew up in. In a big city you're more anonymous, but here there's more people that know your parents and have watched you grow up," he said as he drove one of the teens back to the police station.

Back at the station, Treanor collected the teens belongings, and placed them in a holding call as he booked them individually and snapped quick photos. One teen asked if his parents would have to be notified because it might ruin his college chances. The teens, all of whom were 18 or older, posted the $25 bail later that night and appeared in Quincy District Court Monday morning.

11 p.m.

At this moment, with the three on-duty officers busy booking their prisoners, there were no officers on Cohasset streets. Man power has been an issue for the police department recently. With five officers out injured, everyone has been forced to pick up the slack. Quigley worked Friday night as overtime.

11:03 p.m.

As Treanor booked the teens, a call reported a black SUV at Aveni Cleaners on Route 3A whose occupants were throwing beer cans out the window. Quigley and I quickly hopped into his car and took off down Elm Street towards Lower King Street.

Quigley's siren wailed as he quickly topped 55 miles per hour going down the wet, narrow, curvy road. As I looked out the window and saw houses on North Main Street whiz by me in a blue blur, two thoughts popped into my adrenaline-fueled mind: "This is pretty cool!" and "I wish I had remembered to put on my seatbelt."

Aveni Cleaners' parking lot was empty by the time we got there, but the caller was following the SUV down Beechwood Street. North Main Street was a wide-thoroughfare compared to the trip down King and then Beechwood Street. As nervous/excited as I was, Quigley was the picture of calm.

"I'm on these streets eight hours a day," he said. "You get to know every bump and pothole."

The car got away into Scituate and we drove back down Beechwood Street. Two teenage girls in a car pulled out next to us at the Beechwood Street/Route 3A intersection and took a right. Quigley took a left.

I asked Quigley why Cohasset police take such a tough stance on teens and alcohol.

"If you give someone a break, and let them go, and something happens to them, it's going to come back on me," he said. Every time Quigley stops a car, he calls in the license plate. That number is fed into a computer and if the car is later in an accident, Quigley's stop is on the plate's record.

"This is a very litigious world," he continued. "I'm not going to risk my career, and my home. It's not worth it."

11:20 p.m.

Quigley heard an audible perimeter alarm from Stop & Shop while checking its parking lot. After a lot of banging on windows trying to get someone's attention, the shift supervisor said someone had accidentally hit an emergency door.

Because Treanor is still held up at the police station, Quigley started to patrol his area.

"We don't go out looking for trouble, you just come across things," he said, specifically mentioning the teen caught urinating earlier in Shaw's Plaza. "Sometimes they make it easy."

11:35 p.m.

Quigley drove by a green Subaru from Vermont parked on a crosswalk in Cohasset Village and quickly issued a ticket. He continued down Elm Street towards Government Island for a quick check.

11:50 p.m.

Det. Greg Lennon's specialty is drug investigations, but on this night, with a shortage of men, he is forced out to patrol the street. For nearly two hours Lennon spoke frankly about his job as we criss-crossed the town. Lennon is passionate about his job, and makes you glad he is on your side.

12:02 a.m.

A report of a fight in a parking lot near the Scituate line, but no one is around when we pull in.

12:11 a.m.

An abandoned 911 call from a payphone near the Harbormaster's Shack. Again, no one is around when we pull in — just a phone off its hook.

12:18 a.m.

Quigley radioed that he had come across a drunk driver rolling to a stop on Summer Street and asks for Lennon's assistance. The gentleman, whom we had just seen leaving the American Legion hall on our way to Government Island, was slurring his words, and could not say the alphabet nor count to four on his fingers. Quigley said he didn't have enough evidence to arrest him for drunken driving but took his keys away and gave him a ride to his house.

"This is your lucky night," he said.

12:39 a.m. - 1:22 a.m.

Aside from a routine traffic stop on Route 3A, the radio was quiet for the better part of an hour.

Lennon took a drive up Norfolk Road at about 1:22 a.m. and passed two teen males walking along the road.

"Did you see how interested they were in who I was," Lennon said as he drove up toward Milliken Field. "As part of my job, I want to know who's out walking around at 1:30 in the morning."

He swung around and headed back down Norfolk Road onto Cushing Road, again passing the teens. He drove to the end of the dead-end road and turned around. As he did, the teens darted into the shadows of a garage. Lennon quickly pulled up and asked what they are doing in someone's yard.

"We're not doing anything," they insisted.

"Then why did you run into the yard?" Lennon asked. After a few more questions he sent them on their way, but not before first checking to see if they disposed of anything in the garage's shadows. He turned up nothing.

1:27 a.m.

Quigley then radioed that he was chasing a car down Cushing Road towards James Lane.

"I'm right there," Lennon told him, as he threw on his lights and quickly headed directly towards the oncoming car. It quickly stops and is sandwiched between the two squad cars.

Quigley said he saw the gentlemen leaving the village area at a high rate of speed and tried to pull him over. He's let go with just a speeding ticket.

1:48 a.m.

While back riding with Quigley, a general bulletin came over the radio alerting area departments of an armed robbery in Hingham. The robbers were later captured in Weymouth.

1:50 a.m.

Dispatch relayed a report of a stranger with a flashlight in a Pleasant Street yard, and a green car parked outside. Quigley started to head over to the scene but stopped when Lennon radioed in to say it was just him.

2:03 a.m.

Lennon called in a verbal fight between a male and a female in the Stop & Shop Parking Lot. He followed the car and pulled it over feet away from the Scituate line. The driver immediately confessed to driving with a revoked license – an arrest-able offense. Quigley asks the male driver to step to the rear of the car, which he does. The driver automatically places his hands on the truck and spreads his feet.

"He's obviously done this before, because I didn't tell him to do that," Quigley said later.

Despite being able to arrest the male driver, Lennon chose not to, and instead issued a summons for him to appear in court.

"He was honest, and he was polite, and that goes a long way," Lennon said.

2:26 a.m.

As Quigley and I headed down Beach Street to check out the shore area, we're notified of a report of glass-breaking in the Beechwood Playground/Beechwood Cemetery area. Officer John Small responded first to the scene and reported nothing. We swung through the cemetery and came to the same conclusion.

3 a.m.

We took one last swing through the village and harbor area. Quigley talked about how he prefers working the graveyard shift over the day shift.

"Any calls we get are usually something, we don't get just parking complaints," he said. "It's usually some sort of real police matter, not that parking complaints aren't. It's usually breaking and entering or car accidents.

"Plus it's just a nice shift. It's cooler at night, and I get to see the sun come up on Cohasset Harbor. That's really the nicest part of the day."

We headed into the station house just before 3:30 a.m. as Quigley had yet to do his incident report from his arrests made five hours ago. With the town entering the dead time between 4 a.m. and 7 a.m. it gave him a chance to catch up, as well as get ready for his shift the following day.

As it turns out, he would need it [see related story on the mass arrest].

Identifying presidents

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I was reading the other day that in order not to confuse their administrations, George H.W. Bush (the elder) and George W. Bush (the younger) refer to each other by number, as in George H.W., the 41st president, and George W., the 43rd. They even wear numbered baseball caps so they'll know who's talking to whom.

That set me to thinking. How have other presidents handled this name business so that we, the voters, will know who exactly is responsible for the next scandal that comes out of the White House living quarters? Most of them have handled it well, although it has caused some confusion among the historians.

Take William Jefferson Blythe IV, for instance.

How about President Leslie Lynch King, Jr.?

What? You never heard of him? He occupied the White House for eight years under the name of Bill Clinton. Seems his birth father, William Jefferson Blythe III, died in an auto accident before Bill was a year old, and his mother married Roger Clinton. The future president changed his name when he was 16.

That was an easy one. How about President Leslie Lynch King, Jr.? He was our 38th president, the only one who was appointed rather than elected. Leslie Lynch King, Sr. and his wife were divorced when Leslie, Jr. was two years old, and his mother married Gerald Rudolf Ford, Sr. Young Leslie became Gerald Rudolf Ford, Jr.

Incidentally, Gerald, Jr. didn't take to the spelling of his middle name, so he changed it to Rudolph.

I'm betting that the president we know as Ulysses Simpson Grant was before your time, so you don't remember that his real name was Hiram Ulysses Grant. When he got an appointment to West Point, he didn't want to have the humiliating initials HUG stenciled onto his belongings, so he became Ulysses Hiram Grant.

When his congressman, Thomas L. Hamer, enrolled him at the academy, he made a mistake and called him Ulysses Simpson Grant. The future president had enough hassle about his name, so he let the matter drop and adopted the initials USG. Classmates dubbed him Uncle Sam, and he went through four years at the Point known as Sam.

Not many of us remember John Calvin Coolidge, who was called Cal to distinguish him from his father, John; or Thomas Woodrow Wilson, who called himself T. Woodrow Wilson as a Princeton grad and finally dropped the Thomas altogether, or Stephen Grover Cleveland, who became S. Grover Cleveland and then just plain Grover.

Dwight David Eisenhower was really David Dwight Eisenhower. His father was David, too, so the family called the youngster Dwight to avoid confusion. Pretty soon, he was signing papers Dwight, and Dwight he was. It really didn't matter. Everybody outside the family called him Ike.

And then there was Harry S Truman.

Naming Harry was a struggle for Martha and John Truman. John wanted the middle name to be Shippe after the paternal grandfather. Martha was partial to the name Solomon, who was her father.

So they compromised with S No period. Just S

Local pond activists are making a difference

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

If a pond is ten acres or greater in area, according to the Paleys of Scituate, it may be classified as a Great Pond owned by the Commonwealth. Norm Paley and his wife, Joan are environmental activists around Musquashicut Pond in Scituate. They are good examples of what determined and interested citizens can do in helping our environment. Musquashicut Pond is fed by fresh water from Sheeps Pond at one end and Cohasset Harbor which feeds saltwater into the other. Because of the work by the Paleys, the pond has been declared a Great Pond which makes it subject to Mass General Laws covering state owned great ponds. If it interacts with the ocean in some way then it falls under the Clean water Act and federal statutes. According to the Massachusetts general laws, state-owned bodies of water must meet federal, state and local standards for water quality, and the responsibility for cleanup must be determined.

Musquashicut should be of interest to Cohasset because it suffers from the same environmental problems as our Straits Pond at the head of Jerusalem Road.

Musquashicut should be of interest to Cohasset because it suffers from the same environmental problems as our Straits Pond.

Both ponds are more than 200 years old, and have a history of problems, mainly associated with very high nutrient levels from septic systems and lawn chemicals, and consequently suffer from algae blooms and midge swarming on a seasonal basis. Both are shallow ponds, although Straits is shallow because of ledge in its bottom, and Musquashicut was once filled in by barrier beach sand. Good solutions to the problems of both ponds are not simple or cheap. For the most part they consist of doing three things:

- Fix the septic systems bordering the ponds so that they don't provide nutrients to the ponds, or sewer the houses bordering the ponds.
- Conduct a program of lawn and turf management to reduce nutrients from garden fertilizers.
- Conduct a program of storm-water management. This mainly consists of upgrading catch basins around the ponds so that surface water is cleaned up before it reaches the ponds.

Most towns have a hundred items on their agendas, which are higher priority than these issues. That is why the listing of a pond as a Great Pond is so important, because it is therefore eligible for certain state grants it would not otherwise be eligible for. But still, the grant has to be aimed at solving the long-term problem. For years, residents have sought quick fixes such as larvicides and pesticides to control the problem of midges, and algae harvesting to solve the algae problem. Straits Pond missed out on a state grant because the grant request was mainly a program for continuing pesticide spraying; not an environmental cleanup.

Because of determined efforts by the Paleys and other interested and concerned neighbors, Scituate got a hearing with the Pesticide Board subcommittee of the legislature requesting that it review the use of pesticides in the pond. Work by the Paleys has shown that pesticides used in the pond have a harmful effect on shellfish and fish (midge predators). For example, the EPA is currently studying Methoprene (the pesticide used on Musquashicut) as one of the possible causes of the Long Island Sound lobster die-off in 1999, and the product safety data sheet states that it is highly toxic to fish and shellfish.

More important than trying to get rid of pesticides, the Paleys are making sure that sewering of the homes around the pond is on Scituate's agenda and doesn't fall through the cracks. Also, they have caused the Army Corps of Engineers to consider a study of Musquashicut and it's neighbor, Sheeps pond.

But even more important is the fact that a few dedicated citizens like the Paleys have gotten out and decided to do something about one of our major environmental problems.

The Pesticide Board will hold a hearing at the Statehouse in Boston in the Statehouse Annex Hearing Room A1 at 9:30 a.m. on Wednesday, August 15. At this hearing, the board will discuss, ask questions and receive comments from interested and concerned citizens. If you'd like to learn more about the politics and technology of pond saving, you may want to attend.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

Regional initiatives and Cohasset's master plan

MASTER PLAN

PATTI KEVILLE

In February 2000, I was appointed by the Town Manager as Cohasset's Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC) representative. As the MAPC rep, I am a liaison member of the Growth & Development Committee.

Since I didn't know what the MAPC was or what it did before my appointment, I thought it might be helpful to share some of the things I've learned while on the Council and what they mean to Cohasset's Planning efforts.

Cohasset is part of the MAPC's South Shore Coalition (SSC), which includes 11 towns — from Weymouth to Duxbury and Rockland to Pembroke. We meet once a month where representatives from the state's Metropolitan Planning Organization and its affiliates present state-run initiatives and grant programs.

Executive Order 418, signed by Governor Cellucci in March 2000, is one such initiative.

EO418 provides towns with up to $30,000 for creation of a Community Development Plan (CDP), which focuses on housing, economic development, transportation, and open space & resource protection planning. As it happens, these are four major components of the master plan, which is now being addressed by the Growth and Development Committee.

Our Growth and Development Committee members have been able to learn from other MAPC representatives who are also creating master plans. Hingham, Weymouth, Duxbury and Marshfield have completed their master plans. Norwell and Scituate, like Cohasset, are just kicking off their visioning sessions and are conducting their neighborhood meetings. These public forums are the first crucial step in designing our comprehensive master plan.

The master plan, when completed, will serve as guidelines to help town officials in their decision-making process. It will not be a static 'rules of engagement' document. It will be a living document that, at best, reflects the goals and ideals of the residents of Cohasset and how they would like this beautiful town managed.

I've outlined below the four Community Development Plan components — and where state funding and MAPC initiatives may help us in pursuing our planning goals.

1. Housing. More specifically, Affordable Housing. MAPC data suggests that a full 42 percent of Cohasset residents will be over 55 years old in 20 years. State grants are available to help support building affordable housing. Controlling sprawl and preserving open space are key themes with MAPC in relation to housing. MAPC has held seminars on different ways to design housing to address this goal.

The Senior Housing Committee has been working on finding town land to develop affordable housing for our seniors (55 or over). Accessory dwelling options for seniors have been suggested as one alternative to meet this need. This proposal will be re-addressed for zoning by-law changes this fall.

Neighborhood forum participants have also expressed concern over the escalating costs of housing in Cohasset. Shouldn't Cohasset's children be able to afford homes in the town where they grew up? Shouldn't our municipal workers and teachers be able to live in the town they work? A plan for housing will identify priority needs and ways for the town to address them.

2. Economic Development. There are five areas of Cohasset now designated as commercial: Route 3A, the Village, the Harbor, West Corner, and the corner of Beechwood and Doane Streets. There is State funding available for re-development of "Brownfields," existing commercial sites that require rehabilitation or that are under-utilized. Preference for state funding will go to plans that support or create new employment opportunities, mixed use facilities, transit-oriented development, and commercial zones where local infrastructure already exists, as examples. Are there commercial areas about town that you know of which may benefit from these programs?

3. Transportation. Cohasset has five shuttle services available through the Community Center and Elder Affairs. These shuttles primarily serve our seniors for around town, medical runs into Boston, and other pre-scheduled services. We also have the Plymouth & Brockton bus service that provides two morning runs and one evening run to/from Boston.

Transportation money is available for inter-region (two or more towns) services. Would you use a shuttle between Cohasset and Hull, Hingham, and/or Scituate? Alternate modes of transportation (i.e., bike trails and shuttles to the ferry) are also encouraged and may be eligible for funding. Preservation and enhancement of scenic or historic routes may also be considered for state transportation programs.

[Note: Greenbush is not discussed at MAPC meetings because of its controversial nature.]

4. Open Space and Resource Protection. The Open Space Advisory Committee has just completed a comprehensive "Open Space and Recreation Plan 2002-2006," which has been submitted to the Selectmen and the State. In it, they offer suggestions on how the town –and its individual residents — can help create cleaner air, water, and soil.

The Water Commission and Board of Health are hard at work on source water protection and wastewater and storm-water management planning. Their work will help us better understand and mitigate the existing and potential pollutants that threaten our natural resources and environment. These important efforts will be incorporated as part of the final master plan along with development of various geographic information system (GIS) maps.

At the last Town Meeting, Cohasset passed the Community Preservation Act. A committee will be appointed by the Selectmen to help determine where this local and state-matching money should used. Affordable housing, open space, and historic preservation initiatives are the three areas eligible for this funding. Where would you like to see this money spent?

Commercial land vs. affordable housing?

planning and/or severely restricts any future commercial development opportunities."

In other words, the town, which has less than 4 percent of its total housing stock classified as affordable housing, hopes its need for commercially-developable land outweighs its need to create additional affordable housing.

"It's a balancing act," said Town Planner Liz Harrington. "In this case, there has been a consistent policy of earmarking those particular areas for [commercial development], but then again, does that policy outweigh the town's need for affordable housing."

In a recent opinion, John R. Hucksam, an attorney working for town counsel Paul DeRensis, wrote that he did see case history where towns have successfully denied comprehensive permit applications that conflicted with a town master plan.

"Bona fide comprehensive planning concerns are an important factor to be considered in reviewing a comprehensive permit application," he said, citing cases in Barnstable and Pembroke.

He also referenced a case involving Hingham, and a developer who proposed a 288-unit complex on a portion of the former Hingham Ammunition Depot. However, because Hingham had had a master plan for the area, which included a 44-acre office park and 85 acres of affordable housing, it was able to deny the comprehensive permit because it was inconsistent with local needs.

But Hucksam pointed out the state added simply having a master plan was not enough to warrant the rejection of a comprehensive permit. It said if the master plan is "unrealistic," an "ancient planning exercise, ignored and gathering dust for years, and now dusted off to frustrate housing for which clearly there is a need," or "simply a sophisticated maneuver to perpetuate precisely the abuses" a comprehensive permit was designed to eliminate, then the master plan "will not prevail in the weighing process."

Because parts of the town's last master plan, 1961's Benjamin Report, was never implemented, Moore was unsure if it would qualify as a "bona fide," living master plan. However, he did point out that the area along Route 3A has been set aside for commercial development since the 1950s.

"It is safe to say that certain things in the Benjamin Report were ignored, but they had more to do with other parts of town and other zoning areas. The whole area of industrial zoning has held pretty true," he said, adding that a number of attempts to rezone parts of the area residential have failed.

"It's not as if we ran out last week and said, 'We'll make this an industrial area.' It's been part of the zoning map from the beginning...It's a use many communities blatantly left out."

Moore hopes that another industrial business could find a use for the area. "Norfolk Conveyor was wonderful," he said. "They weren't just McJobs, people earned a meaningful salary."

Both Harrington and Moore said the purpose of seeking the opinion wasn't to appear obstructionist, instead to fully research the issue.

"We have an interest in researching and understanding this proposal and how it's consistent with planning efforts," Harrington said.

"No one is trying to stand up and strongly argue that 40B in of itself is bad," said Moore. "If the opportunity to provide affordable housing and solve some of the problems that face society in general arises, it will be given real, fair consideration.

"We want to se what our options are. We're in no way trying to throw down any spear and say, 'Don't you dare cross it.'"

The state guidelines for local review of comprehensive permits say a town can deny a permit if it can prove the development would have a significant negative impact on local health, safety, environment, design, open space and planning concerns.

ABC has entered into a contract with the site's owners to buy the land, but won't complete the deal until the project is approved.

Police have game plan for youth mass arrests

Weymouth.

The other adult involved, a 32-year-old Abington man, who allegedly ran off and later returned to the house where he got into a scuffle with the investigating police officer, was held on $5,000 cash bail and is being charged with resisting arrest and attempting to escape from police custody.

"We also had a call about a vehicle racing up and down the street its stereo blasting," said police chief Brian Noonan about the initial calls that came into headquarters. "When we got up there, the vehicle was gone."

But what officers did find were 10-15 vehicles parked on the roadway and a large group of youths on the lawn at 17 Hillside Drive. Then just as they arrived, the officers were called away to investigate, a bad accident at the corner of Beechwood Street and Norman Todd Road.

At the accident scene police found a Jeep Cherokee with its stereo still blaring, that had rolled over at least twice and landed on its roof in the middle of the road. Witnesses said three youths crawled out of the wreckage and ran down Beechwood Street. The youths ran off into the woods and got away, police said The SUV, which was later reported stolen, is believed to be the same vehicle racing up and down the street at the party.

"This is a prime example of why we do what we do," Officer Jeffrey Treanor said of the accident.

As officers cleared the accident scene at about 10 p.m., police received another complaint about the party and returned to Hillside where they found more cars had arrived and a house was full of alcohol and intoxicated youths, police said. There was also a strong odor of marijuana, police said. At that time, all 32 people in the house were advised they were being placed under arrest.

A suitcase of marijuana pipes and some cash was confiscated from the scene of an under-age drinking party Saturday night.

"When young people are all boozed up there is a potential for trouble."

— Officer William Quigley

Treanor said it was impossible to determine who had just arrived and who had been there.

"It was just safer to take everybody in," he said.

Due to the number of arrests, police used plastic ties instead of handcuffs to prepare the youths for transport to the station.

"When young people are all boozed up there is a potential for trouble," Quigley said, about using the plastic ties, as temporary restraints.

Police called mutual aid from Weymouth, which sent a paddy wagon and officers, and Hingham and Hull which provided officers to help with security at the police station. Cohasset off-duty officers were also called in and the midnight shift was called in early to help with the bookings. Two part-time matrons assisted with the female prisoners.

The youths were "uncuffed" at the station and told to sit down and wait. If they caused trouble, they were told the "cuffs" would be put back on, Quigley said.

One of the adults, Anthony Lucero of Abington, fled the house while the party-goers were being prepared for transport, but apparently returned later to encounter a detective who remained at the home to gather evidence. Police said a violent struggled ensued resulting in both Lucero and the officer falling down the stairs. Cohasset units were called to the scene to assist, a foot pursuit ensued and Lucero was captured but was able to break free. Despite the handcuffs he tried to run away again and was wrestled to the ground and taken to headquarters.

In the house, police also found a quantity of marijuana, upwards of $200 in cash and drug paraphernalia including a suitcase full of marijuana pipes collectively valued at $930. Police haven't been able to determine who the drugs and paraphernalia belong to, and therefore did not charge anyone with drug possession. That matter is still under investigation.

Sara Woods, the party host, was charged under the Social Host Responsibility act. If convicted Woods could face fines of up to $2,000 and/or a year in prison. The law is a result of the death of a Marshfield teenager who was killed in a single-car accident on his way home from a graduation party in Cohasset where he had been drinking.

Quigley said the processing of the arrests went smoothly.

"It went as smoothly as possible considering we have such a small facility to accommodate 30 people," he said. "We done all kinds of contingency planning and we've found what works and have stuck with it."

32 arrested Saturday night

Police made the following arrests following an under-age drinking party Saturday night on Hillside Drive.

Sara Woods, 21, 17 Hillside Drive, was charged with keeping a disorderly house, disturbing the peace and furnishing alcohol to a minor. She is slated to Quincy District Court for a pre-trial hearing on Oct. 1.

Anthony Lucero, 32, 14 Winthrop St., Abington, was charged with resisting arrest, being a disorderly person, attempted escape, giving false name after arrest, and had an outstanding warrant. He is also scheduled to return to court Oct. 1.

All the following youths were charged with disturbing the peace and minor in possession of alcohol.

Put into a diversion program prior to arraignment were: Paul C. Castro, 17, of 175 Kingsley Road, Hull; Larry G. Nelson, 17, of 26 Emeline St., Randolph; Stephanie Wieners, 18, of 133 Nantasket Road, Hull; Angelette Howlett, 18, of 32 Porrazzo Road, Hull; Andrea M. Watts, 18, of 149 Prospect St., Norwell; and Amanda Hall, 17, of 3 Albion St., Rockland. Police said the youths were also required to pay a $50 fee to Mothers Against Driving Drunk (MADD).

Those whose charges were continued without a finding for three months include: Mark Musco, 17, of 77 F St., Hull; Brian D. Hunter, 19, of 354 Cross St., Norwell; Luke A. Anderson, 20, of 24 Chittenden Lane, Norwell; Brian B. Flynn, 17, of 231 Beach Ave., Hull; David D. Brand, 20, of 597 Nantasket Ave., Hull; Charles Cowden, 19, of 151 Riverview St., Brockton; Rebecca R. Manning, 17, of 69 Gilford Road, Hingham; Daniel E. DiCesare, 20, 1010 Main St., Hanover, Matthew M. Anderson, 20, 24 Chittenden Lane, Norwell, and Matthew J. McWade, 17, of 42 Lincoln St., Hingham. The charges will be dismissed in three months if the youths stay out of trouble, police said. The youths were required to pay $85 in court costs, except for Hunter, who had to pay $135.

Those with a return court date of Oct. 1 include: Erik C. Smith, 20, of 270 Grove St., Norwell; Brian E. Gomez, 17, of 12 Rockway Ave., Hull; Patrick A. Carbone, 17, 74 High St., Norwell; Michael R. Gill, 17, of 34 Colonial Road, Hingham; Matthew J. Anderson, 20, of 24 Chittenden Lane, Norwell; Jeffrey P. Mills, 19, of 39 Vinson St., Weymouth; George D. Proctor, 18, of 17 Hillside Dr., Cohasset; and Kathleen J. Shaughnessy, 18, of 14 R. St., Hull.

A 16-year-old youth also faced charges with minor transport and disturbing the peace in juvenile court.

Residents share what they like, dislike about Cohasset

Additional forums will be held tonight at St. Anthony's Parish Center and Thursday, Aug.18, at Nativity-Assumption Greek Orthodox Church.

A neighborhood forum held at the Lightkeepers' Residence last Thursday produced much input on a vision for the future of Cohasset.

The meeting, hosted by the Growth and Development Committee, was the second in a series of four, the first being held in July at the Beechwood Church. The Growth and Development Committee, appointed by the Board of Selectmen, is charged with developing a master plan for Cohasset. The forums provide residents from all areas of town a chance to get involved in the planning process early on. The meetings help the committee share relevant information on the issues facing Cohasset and gather ideas and input on a vision for the future of Cohasset.

Additional forums will be held tonight at St. Anthony's Parish Center and Thursday, Aug.18, at Nativity-Assumption Greek Orthodox Church. Both meetings run from 7:30-9:30 p.m. The neighborhood forums are similar in format. At the start of each meeting, attendees use stars to locate where they live and to highlight favorite places on a map of Cohasset. A series of maps and images depict master plan elements including housing, economic development, natural and cultural resources, open space and recreation, transportation and services and facilities. Historic land use, zoning, watershed protection and other diagrams also on view. Attendees are asked to complete a brief survey.

At the Lightkeepers' meeting Rick Swanborg, committee chairman, reviewed the planning process and then introduced Steve Fusco, Cohasset resident and volunteer. Fusco, a corporate trainer and facilitator, led the group in a brainstorming exercise that yielded pages of ideas and suggestions.

The exercise was structured around three questions. "What do you like about Cohasset?" "What do you dislike about Cohasset?" and "What is your vision for the future of Cohasset?"

Responses to what folks like about Cohasset from both the Beechwood and Lightkeepers' meetings included: Wompatuck, beauty and small town atmosphere, schools, history, variety of stores, recycling program and the "boutique", open town meetings, news media, collaboration of town committees, the ocean, public access to the water, care of personal property, open space, scenic views, friendliness, volunteerism, recreation and children's activities, town center close to Boston and the variety of ages, incomes and personalities.

Dislikes included the lack of coordination between town boards, needed repairs to Beechwood Street bridge, Bound Brook maintenance, dwindling open space, children not able to afford Cohasset, senior housing ignored, lack of public bathrooms, lack of diversity, transportation to Boston, dilapidated housing, lethal air quality due to present land-use patterns, maintenance of ponds and streams, volume and speed of traffic, lack of curbing, playground maintenance, enforcement of zoning, retention ponds as mosquito breeding places, lack of traffic light at Sohier Street/3A, over-development of land and lot coverage, taxes, SUVs, present zoning bylaws and destruction of natural environment.

When asked for their vision of Cohasset in 20 years, the responses ranged from very specific to broad. Specific visions included a new steeple at the Beechwood Church, biking and hiking trails along the railroad right of way, extending the sewer to existing homes, economic equity around sewering, use of organic products instead of chemicals, zoning bylaw revisions, more sidewalks, indoor recreation facility for all ages, school curriculum on environment, history and values, good tasting and safe water supply, reducing waste, regional cooperation, integration of CRC and Master Plan, developing a watershed perspective, town shuttle to Hingham boat and volunteer time for less taxes. Broader visions included a reconnection with nature, a cohesive network of resources for continuing education and community service, citizen stewardship, a return of developed land to its natural state, preserving the small town character of Cohasset and providing direction and opportunities for the youth of Cohasset.

The Growth and Development Committee is very encouraged by the rich quality of participation and ideas offered by attendees and invites others to come and be heard at one of the upcoming forums. Please contact Liz Harrington at ebhtownplanner@aol.com or 781-383-3517 for the minutes of each neighborhood forum.

Gravel pit use plan gets initial approval, but safety issues eyed

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Gravel Pit Reuse Committee, which hopes to construct two new Little League baseball and softball fields in the town's former gravel pit site, won approval from selectmen to place a $27,000 article on the fall Special Town Meeting warrant to put the project out to bid.

However, selectmen asked the committee to reexamine safety issues involving children running between the parking lots and fields.

The board was wary of expanding the existing parking lot, which would be located in between the three fields. The expanded parking lots would get cars that currently park along North Main Street off the busy road. But at least one selectman said the complex would still have the same safety concerns.

"You still have the problem of children running in between cars," Selectman Michael Sullivan said.

He pointed out that children would also be forced to cross between fields near the main entrance of the complex.

"We need to keep kids out of the street area," he said.

The committee's plan calls for two additional fields to be constructed in the pit adjacent to Barnes Field. The area was recently filled with 20,000 cubic square feet of fill from the town school construction project. Plans are to also construct a 22-space lot parallel to North Main Street, and expand the existing lot to accommodate 50 cars.

Sullivan asked if the plan could cut down the amount of spaces in the back of the site in order to create a fenced-off area where children could safely cross between fields.

However, parking logistics may not allow that to happen.

"When you have three games going on, you're really going to need all 72 spaces," warned Town Manager Mark Haddad, who has worked closely with the committee.

The committee said it will go back and look for a way to improve safety.

Cohasset Youth Baseball President Mark DeGiacomo said the organization would also look into moving the complex's snack bar away from the entrance to the rear of the fields.

He also said the organization has committed $5,000 toward the engineering costs, and has begun a capital fundraising campaign.

The cost for building two top-quality fields could cost as much as $466,000. However, the committee is optimistic it could be done for as low as $280,000 by cost-cutting measures such as not paving the parking lots, and having the gravel base for the fields donated.

LIBRARY CORNER

New faces

Beginning in September, Sharon Moody of Cohasset will be the new children's librarian at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Moody will be a familiar face to many Cohasset children and their parents — she taught for a number of years in Cohasset's elementary schools. She has also been a volunteer at the library's circulation desk.

An avid reader herself, Moody has always aimed to bring the joy of reading to all of her students. She is looking forward to the new challenge of working in a public library setting. Her extensive knowledge and experience as a reading teacher and a special needs teacher will be invaluable in her new assignment at the library. Her love of children's literature is contagious.

Moody will replace Suzanne Terry who resigned from the Pratt Library in June to accept a position with the Boston Atheneum.

Another new face at the library is that of reference librarian Deirdre MacDermott. Many library users have already met MacDermott who began working on July 10. A graduate of the University of Massachusetts, MacDermott has her master's degree in library science from Simmons College. She has worked at the Boston Public Library and the Plymouth Public Library. Her training and experience, as well as her acquaintance with the South Shore area, will serve her well in Cohasset. MacDermott replaces Susan Watrous who retired in July.

'Mariners Park' suggested for Hagerty site

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Hagerty Committee has voted to recommend the Hagerty site off Parker Avenue be named "Mariner's Park" in memory of Cohasset residents who have died at sea.

The park, which is in the final stages of construction, will consist of a 27-space parking lot and boat turn-around, new town pier and dock, and wooden walkway over to Government Island.

With the eight-year project winding down, the committee had changed its focus from planning and permitting to planning a dedication ceremony.

Committee member Paul Pattison, who suggested the name "Mariner's Park," read a brief list of people he knew who had died at sea, including Tony and Rick Figueiredo, Peter Grimes, Jack Hubbard, Harold Hill and Paul Diamond.

"For a small town like this, the amount of people is unbelievable."
— Paul Pattison, committee member

"For a small town like this, the amount of people is unbelievable," he told selectmen.

Pattison also suggested erecting a small plaque memorializing people who have died at sea.

The landing at the end of the street was named by a Town Meeting vote in 1995 for longtime Parker Avenue resident R. Edward Maree, and was suggested by Glenn Pratt that the name be extended over the entire park.

But committee chairman Russ Bonetti said the board voted to keep the landing separate from the rest of the park, although they did suggest installing a new marker for the landing on the park.

Selectman Michael Sullivan thought the name should be approved by a Town Meeting vote, although the board has the ability to approve the name.

The board held off voting on the name until it receives some feedback from the community. They urge residents to call the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105 with any input.

A tentative dedication date of Saturday, Sept. 8 has been scheduled.

World War II memorial due soon

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The long-awaited additions to the honor roll of veterans who served during World War II could soon be on its way to Veteran's Memorial Park. According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, who has been in contact with Austin "Bud" Ahern, the head of the privately-funded Cohasset Military Memorial, Inc., the granite stone is being engraved in Vermont and should be shipped down to Cohasset soon.

In 1993, a battle broke out over the proper ending date of World War II. Though the military aspect of the war ended with V-J Day on August 14, 1945, Congress did not end the state of war until Dec. 31, 1946. The federal government recognizes those who served in the occupational forces, after V-J Day, as World War II veterans. But the Cohasset honor roll did not include those veterans' names. In 1995, an agreement was made by the town and Ahern, to add the missing names.

Last June, selectmen threatened to take over control of the stalled $20,000 project, but later backed off. A group spearheaded by Selectman Merle Brown gathered the remaining veterans names and gave them to Ahern who ordered the work done. After a series of delays, Haddad reported that he spoke to the Vermont company a month ago and expects it to arrive in the near future.

However some residents still are unhappy. Windy Hill resident Joe McElroy appeared before selectmen Tuesday to urge them to get more involved in the project and ensure it is completed.

"Promises have been broken," he said. "Last year we had reassurance it would be done by Memorial Day. Then it was by the end of June, and then by the end of July."

Selectmen argued they didn't have the ability to do anything about the delays.

"What leverage do we have?" asked Selectman Thomas Callahan. "It doesn't involve town money, it's not a town committee, all we can do is say you can't use town land, and then it just won't get done at all."

Some senate budget victories for Cohasset

HEDLUND REPORT

BOB HEDLUND

The Senate passed a $22.9 billion budget in June noteworthy for its fiscal restraint, increasing the bottom line over the House's version by only $565,000 in additional appropriations. This was remarkable considering what the budget accomplishes for education funding and support of the Clean Elections Law.

Budget deliberations opened with a Republican-led discussion of the sobering May tax collection figures, which were $154 million, or 3 percent below, expected revenues. Republicans urged the Senate to heed this early warning, and acknowledge the prudence of using the administration's lower growth rate forecasts to guide the debate.

School aid

I played a key role in assuring that increases to local education aid, and plans to further study changes to the Foundation Aid Formula, also prevailed. I co-sponsored an amendment to the budget, inspired by the League of Women Voters' proposal, which would have restructured the formula used for determining local aid so that annual distributions would be a truer reflection of each community's financial need. The formula remains under review, and a discussion of how to more fairly allocate funds to communities while taking into consideration town wealth, special education costs and available dollars for MCAS remediation funds continues.

Fiscal Year 2002's budget for education aid includes an additional $220,591,265 statewide over last year's allotment, and $671,998 over the House's proposal. Cohasset's Chapter 70 allotment is $1,434,091 in the Senate version of the budget, an 8 percent increase over last year. Additional assistance is $209,013, and the lottery distribution is $435,175, a 6.4 percent increase.

The Senate also passed a $50 million MCAS Remediation Package, $10 million greater than last year, to help more schools offer remedial test preparation to improve student achievement. The impending 2003 timeframe for passing the MCAS makes this funding crucial to our students' success, and parents' peace of mind.

The School Building Assistance Budget was also increased by the Senate by $40 million above the FY01 appropriation, bringing the total to $365 million in FY02 to reimburse school districts for school construction projects like the Cohasset Middle/High School project.

Clean elections

The Senate Budget includes $20 million to fully fund the Clean Elections Law through the next election cycle, in stark contrast to the House's zero funding. The Lees-Rosenberg amendment also made many necessary technical changes to the Clean Elections Law. I know from the feedback I've received from my constituents, fulfillment of the promise made regarding public financing of political campaigns is an issue of trust. This amendment cleared some very murky waters concerning implementation of the law. Some highlights of this amendment include: clarifying expenses covered and time limits on certain fund raising efforts; providing for study of: flexibility between primary and general election expenditures and allowing candidates to participate in the voluntary public financing system in the primary election only; and extending the beginning of the 2002 election cycle until 90 days after the budget becomes law.

Other budget highlights include $25 million in hospital rate relief beyond the House's provisions, an extra $40 million for certified nursing assistants at nursing homes, and $1 million to a new program for a statewide suicide prevention master plan.

Bob Hedlund is state senator for the Plymouth-Norfolk District that includes Cohasset.

facility on Ripley Road, Hannan seems to be a natural for the job.

She's served as acting director for the past few months since Bustin left in March — so Hannan has had time to fill her "new shoes" without publicly being introduced to the region as the head art lady.

But those tune-up days are over. Vcevy Strekalovsky, president of the center's board of directors, proudly heralded Hannan's appointment to the executive directorship last week. He praised her work as program director helping to increase course enrollments and expanding the visibility of the center within the community and throughout the area.

"We are very much looking forward to Sarah's enthusiastic leadership and energy," he said.

As Hannan takes on more of a public persona in her new role — she wants more visibility for the art center.

"I'd like everyone to be able to find us," she says. "We are off the beaten track and not right next to the highway."

However once art enthusiasts discover the center — they like what's available there. The center has a very high student retention rate.

"Once they find us, they tend to stay with us," Hannan says.

The glass front doors to the art center are deceptive. There's no way driving by or walking past, you can appreciate what's beyond them. The doors open up to a colorful world that includes spectacular gallery space, classrooms where creativity abounds and people coming and going with paintings and art supplies in tow. Hannan says she and the center staff love the sound of the pitter-patter of little feet in the classrooms upstairs.

"We love to have the building buzzing with activity," she says. "It's hard to get a thought done because there is always someone coming in doing something great."

Hannan also comes with the formal credentials for her new post. An art history major with a degree from Boston University, the married mother of two grown children recently completed a graduate certificate program at Northeastern in managing non-profits. The knowledge will help her lead the art center, which just completed a strategic plan to help it focus on the future.

Part of the plan is to get businesses hooked on art. Companies that become members can rent the facility free of charge for events and their employees can take classes at the members' discount rate. Hannan would like to see business involvement at the center all year round and not be limited to sponsorships for the annual Festival on the Common. A good example of how that's possible is Matrix2000, an Internet company, whose logo is colorfully displayed on cover of the new sketchbooks touting the Visiting Artist Workshops at the center along with a vivid abstract by artist Annie Silverman.

Hannan, who praises the team at the center that includes seven employees all working together in a collaborative effort, stresses the center has something to offer everyone.

Classes range from "Drawing and Painting for the Petrified" to the Visiting Artist Workshops taught by professionals for intermediate to advanced students.

"We have students here from Plymouth to Revere," she says. "I'd like to build on the fact we have classes for the absolute beginner to professional artist."

Hannan says she enjoys the way the center is constantly changing.

"One of the things I love is when a show closes and we take everything down and bring in new work," she says. "It is so exciting to put up a new show and have an opening reception."

Stars of the Week

CO-STARS OF THE WEEK:

The Cohasset Swim Team, which beat the Scituate Knights' of Columbus to finish its season undefeated, and the eight Cohasset cyclists who completed the 192-mile Pan-Mass Challenge last weekend are co-stars of the week. Both are great accomplishments and the participants deserve to share the honor.

Cohasset swimmers end season perfect

It was the most anticipated meet of the season. On Friday afternoon, Cohasset swim team competed against Scituate's Knights of Columbus in a meet that would determine which team would remain undefeated in the South Shore League's 2001 season.

It was a closely fought competition right to the final lap of the final race and, in a wonderful cliff-hanger of an ending, Cohasset pushed ahead of its rivals to win by a tiny but glorious margin of nine points ending the day with the honor of being the South Shore league's undefeated team.

The afternoon got off to an encouraging start with great performances from Cohasset's youngest swimmers who won the first two 100-yard medley relays (boys, 8 and under: 1st: Carrier; Buckley; Shipp; Durkin, T.; 3rd: Durkin, Je.; Campbell; Mahoney; Durkin, J.; 4th: Whitney, A.; Murphy, J.; Lynner; Murphy, C.; girls, 8 and under: 1st: Karski; Fontaine; Musto; Michalowski; 3rd: Kucinski; Axelson; Murphy; Farren, A.; 4th: Farren, N.; Donohue; Berbe; Seraikas). The ten and under boys lagged just slightly behind their younger teammates with a second and fourth place finish (2nd: Connors; Porter; Doonan; Ulmer; 4th: Queenan; Ofsthun; Stevenson; McCormack), but the girls pulled back with another win (1st: Meehan; Lehr, S.; Mahoney, C.; Lehr, T.; 3rd: Mahoney, M.; Sullivan; Baumgarten; McElhinny; 4th: Costa; Teague; Meikleham; Kells). The last two 100-yard races were equally productive, with wins for both the ten and under boys and girls (boys: 1st: Hunt; Zappolo; Dickinson; Conway; 3rd: Shipp; Musto; Doonan; Cunningham; 4th: Muir; Kelly; Faber; Drybanski; girls: 1st: Hernan; Durkin; Garber; Englander; 3rd: Plante; Fortin; Swain; Sacks; 5th: Madge; Teague; Hurd; Anderson).

In a cliff-hanger, Cohasset pushed ahead of its rivals to win by a tiny but glorious margin.

The 17-and-under boys added further to the score, finishing a split second in front of their powerful rivals (1st: McCarthy; Faber; Berg; Tehranian), and the girls collected an additional four points with second, fourth and fifth place finishes (2nd: Daley; Anderson; Jacobucci; Regan; 4th: Musto; Hurley; Jerome; Orsini; 5th: Harrington; B.; Sida; Ogrodnik; Foley, T.).

With the 100 and 200-yard medleys complete, Cohasset had edged ahead with 56 points to K of C's 40.

As the older swimmers prepared for the individual medleys, the ten and under boys and girls completed their 50-yard freestyles. The boys finished in third, fifth and sixth places (3rd: Doonan, B.; 5th:

Eight Cohasset cyclists finish 192-mile Pan-Mass bike ride

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

"There is a cure for sore muscles," replied Cohasset native Peter Vitello upon being asked about his grueling weekend trek. "But the pain that the cancer survivors have endured—that's what motivates you."

Vitello was one of eight Cohasset cyclists who will joined 3,700 other riders this weekend in the Annual Pan-Massachusetts Challenge (PMC). It is a 192-mile bike ride that serves as a fund raiser for the American Cancer Society.

"I think it is a great thing to do to find a cure for cancer," said first time rider Jim Clark of Cohasset.

The two day ride raised an estimated $13 million for the Jimmy Fund at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute.

The event started with a mere 36 riders making the trip from Sturbridge to Provincetown in 1980. But over the last two decades, the number of riders and, consequently, the amount raised, has increased every year. In total, PMC has raised nearly $55 million for the Jimmy Fund.

"The true experience is very moving," said Cohasset's Francois Nivaud, who completed the challenge every year from 1995-2000, but was unable to participate this year. "You have to get on the bike with 3,000 other riders to get the feeling."

Nivaud particularly remembers seeing Lance Armstrong as a guest speaker during the Annual Friday Night Kickoff Ceremony two years ago. Beyond the celebrities, though, Nivaud was very impressed with the amount of help required to make this as smoothly run as it is.

"What is amazing is the number of volunteers involved at the stations every twenty miles," he recalled.

This year, there were more than 1,800 men and women working these stations, giving the riders everything from water to energy bars to backrubs to bike repairs to clean bathrooms.

Vitello called upon a very touching anecdote at one such rest stop, a stop where he saw a chemotherapy patient cleaning out the portable bathrooms.

Vitello personally thanked the lady for the job she was doing, only to have her reply to the effect: "I am going to die of cancer soon. I want

Mariner All-Scholastic boys lacrosse team

Four Skippers chosen among area's elite

Ronan Buick, Paul Previte, Geoff McWilliams and Kyle Weber may have played leads in the storybook run by Cohasset High's boys lacrosse team this spring, but there were several others who performed vital roles in helping the Skippers reach the state Div. 2 championship match with Hingham.

The aforementioned quartet were easy selections for our 14-member All-Scholastic team. There were several others from C.H.S., though, who also received strong consideration, among them captain Lane Forrier, Eric Libby, Jason Moore and Nick Spirito—each of whom deservedly received Honorable Mention recognition from us.

In the end, we limited ourselves to only 14 players. So, without further ado, here they are:

Cohasset senior captain Ronan Buick gets ready to fire one of his 49 goals during a game against Scituate. Buick, who led the state finalist Skippers with 86 points, was chosen to the Mariner All-Scholastic boys lacrosse team, along with Geoff McWilliams, Paul Previte and Kyle Weber.

Ronan Buick- Senior (Capt.)
Midfield - Cohasset

Leading scorer for the Div. 2 state runner-up Skippers this season with 86 points (49 goals, 37 assists) despite missing five games with a partially dislocated shoulder...the 6-foot-3-175 pound midfielder was regarded equally for his toughness and finesse...three-time Pilgrim Conference All-Star ...best output this season was an incredible 13 point effort against Hanover (seven goals, six assists)...is headed to Providence College this fall on a lacrosse scholarship...leaning towards majoring in math or computer science...Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic selection...twice played in the Bay State Games, helping the Southeast team to a gold and silver medal...recently played in pickup game with several college and high school All-Americans and more than held his own, according to Cohasset High and Bay State Games head coach Kevin Orcutt...also a standout in football, easily leading the Skippers in tackles this past fall on his way to earning team MVP and Mariner All-Scholastic honors...Cohasset coach Kevin Orcutt: "Ronan was the heart and soul of our team this year. He is a great worker and he's very unselfish. He is just very determined to do well. I think he has the potential to do very well at the collegiate level."

the backline for the Div. 2 state runner-up Skippers this season…the 6-foot-3-inch 210 pound captain was both a well rounded defender and punishing hitter…improved considerably in his senior year, his first full season playing defense…a four year member of the varsity squad who moved from midfield to defense in his junior year…biggest area of improvement, according to coach Kevin Orcutt, was on clears…second team Pilgrim Conference All-Star…will attend U-Mass-Amherst this fall, and may attempt to walk on with the school lacrosse team…also played varsity lacrosse at C.H.S.…Cohasset coach Kevin Orcutt: "A lot of times this season, Geoff was the catalyst for us. When he was on top of his game defensively, we were a real tough team to beat. His improvement this year was a huge factor in our turnaround this season."

Geoff McWilliams

Paul Previte - Junior
Attack - Cohasset

The leading goal scorer (53) and second top overall point producer (76 points) for the Div. 2 state runner-up Skippers this season…second team Pilgrim Conference All-star…utilizes quickness, agility and a quick release around the net to rack up his points…scored a pair of goals in four games to help the Southeast team to a gold medal at last month's Bay State Games…also a standout with the C.H.S. football team, having already been named to captain the team this fall…has attended several prominent lacrosse camps this summer, including the New England Premier, the Peak 2000 and Top Star Camp in Gettysburg, Penn.…cutting back on overly-aggressive play and retaliation fouls played a big role in his improved late season play, according to coach Kevin Orcutt…scored 19 goals in four game stretch prior to the state championship showdown with Hingham, including five of 10 against Milton in second round of tourney…would like to play lacrosse in college, and has already heard from several interested universities, including University of Vermont, Middlebury (Vt). Nazareth, Lafayette and Bowdoin…is leaning towards majoring in law or business…Cohasset coach Kevin Orcutt: "When Paul's head is in the game, he can be as lethal as just about any attacker in our league. He's always had the ability to take over a game, and he showed that by really keeping himself focussed in the tourney."

Paul Previte

Kyle Weber - Junior
Goalie - Cohasset

The junior backstopped the Skippers Cinderella run to the state Div. 2 championship game this season with an outstanding .720 save percentage (236 saves)…followed that up saving 71 percent of the shots he saw in the Bay State Games to help lead the Southeast team to a Gold Medal…this marked his second time on the Bay State Games roster…at 5-feet-9- 145 pounds, speed and instincts are his leading attributes…played in the highly thought of Peak 2000 lacrosse camp recently…first team Pilgrim Conference All-Star…also started in net for the varsity squad as a sophomore…got to play on the attack in blowout situations this season, and compiled 11 points (six goals, five assists)…hoping to play lacrosse and study Pre-med in college…presently looking at Northwestern, Dartmouth and Swarthmore Universities…also played basketball for Cohasset High this year…Cohasset coach Kevin Orcutt: "When Kyle is really on his game, like he was in the Bay State's, he's about as good as anyone you'll see at this level. Everyone was really impressed with him there. He was just so solid for us all year. He's obviously a very strong goalie, but I think it's his stick skills that set him apart. He's got better stick skills that half the attack men I've seen. He was probably the best (goalie) with the ball I saw this year."

Kyle Weber

Sean Morris - Senior (Capt.)
Attack - Marshfield

Unquestionably one of the most talented attackmen on the South Shore, Morris scored 74 total points in 14 games this season on 47 goals and 27 assists…Career stats find Morris with 326 points…An All-American this season, Morris has been voted to the first team of the Pilgrim Conference All-star squad for the past three years…Morris has played on the varsity squad since his eighth-grade year…Also a talented football player, Morris was the Rams' star running back last fall rushing for 1,450 yards and scoring 24 touchdowns, which is a school record…Morris is making his second appearance on a Mariner All-Scholastic team, as he made our football squad last fall…Despite receiving numerous scholarship offers for football, Morris decided to take a full-scholarship for lacrosse from Rutgers University, which he will attend this fall. Marshfield coach Robby Robertson: "There are a couple of things about him that are unique. He's got a great first step and a quick move to the goal. He's got the ability to blast off and get past his man. He's able to take the ball in anytime. He also spent a lot of time distributing the ball this year because he knew we had to build an offense around him and he played into that very well. I think his potential in college is astounding."

Greg Sowyrda - Junior
Defenseman - Hingham

This All-American defenseman caused headaches for some of the South Shore's top attackers…Continually called upon to guard the opponent's best offensive player, Sowyrda was key in shutting teams down, particularly in Hingham's win over Cohasset in the State Championship…A Pilgrim Conference All-star, Sowyrda also scored three goals and eight assists this season…Sowyrda was voted by his teammates as Hingham's best defensive player…Sowyrda contributed to the Southeast team's gold medal winning performance in this year's Bay State Games…The junior—who played in the E Mass All-star game—is making his second appearance on a Mariner/Journal All-Scholastic team, as he made our basketball squad last winter…Sowyrda will be among the Harbormen's top returning players next season as one of the team's four captains. Hingham coach John Todd: "He's probably one of the top defensemen in the state. We had a few guys on defense, but Greg definitely anchored it. He always took the other team's toughest guy and had great games in the big games. He has an unbelievable takeaway check and moves the ball very well. I'm glad we have him back next year."

Nick Mayo - Senior (Capt.)
Midfield - Marshfield

Was one of the Marshfield team's top goal scorers with 32 points this season on 22 goals and 10 assists…A Pilgrim Conference All-star, Mayo's tough play in the Rams' midfield proved invaluable for Marshfield this season…The senior co-captain's great speed in the middle came up big for Marshfield on fast-break plays…Although also a great defensive player, Mayo shined on offense for the Rams…Mayo will attend college next year and will continue his lacrosse career. Marshfield coach Robby Robertson: "His strength is offense. He's a very athletic player, he's very fast. He was a hard-nosed, committed player. He just flied around the field."

Pat Lenhart - Junior
Attack - Hingham

Was the leading scorer on Hingham's State Champion team, racking up 77 points on 44 goals and 33 assists…Career stats find him with 143 points…A two-time Pilgrim Conference All-star, Lenhart was voted by his teammates as the Harbormen's MVP and best offensive player…Was a force for the Harbormen not only in the post-season, but during the team's tough regular season contests as well, including Billerica and Lincoln-Sudbury, teaming with fellow All-Scholastic Connor Fitzgerald for one of the most productive offenses in the state…Contributed to the Southeast team's gold medal winning performance in this year's Bay State Games and participated in the E Mass All-star game…A Student Council member, Lenhart is ranked among the top 30 of his junior class…Lenhart will be one of the Harbormen's top returnees next season as one of the team's four captains. Hingham coach John Todd: "He's fast. He's tough. He really sees the field and he's a great finisher. He scores goals. He and Connor complimented each other well on the front line."

Pat Collins - Senior (Capt.)
Attack - Marshfield

For three years, Collins has combined with fellow All-Scholastic Sean Morris for one of the most productive front lines in the Pilgrim Conference…A PC All-star, Collins was the Rams' second-leading scorer behind Morris, with 70 points on 37 goals and 33 assists…The two provided the perfect one-two punch on the offensive front for Marshfield, causing fits for their opponents…Also an extremely good defenseman, Collins' ability to ride his opponents weakened their offensive strategies…A talented athlete, Collins also played football at Marshfield High…A senior lacrosse co-captain, Collins will attend Washington and Lee in Virginia next year, where he hopes to continue his lacrosse career. Marshfield coach Robby Robertson: "Pat and Sean worked well together as a pair. Pat is the best rider I've ever coached. He's an extremely intelligent and physical player and has a great ability to steal the ball."

Hardy Allen - Junior
Midfield - Hingham

Was a solid investment at midfield for the State Champions…An extremely tough player, Allen took his defensive strengths learned at Thayer Academy and developed his offensive strengths at Hingham, where he is known for his hard shot at the goal…Still just a junior, Allen was voted a Pilgrim Conference All-star for his play this season and has already been elected a captain for next year…Allen came up big in the big games for Hingham, devouring ground balls and producing plays…Allen was also one of five Harbormen players to participate in the E Mass All-star game. Hingham coach John Todd: "He's just a midfield power. He has the ability to just open up a game. He's tough. He's tenacious. He's a strong lefty with an unbelievable shot. It will be nice to have him back next year."

Matt Connelly - Senior (Capt.)
Midfield - Hingham

Was a four-year starter for Hingham and was a "great captain and leader" for coach John Todd's State Champions in his senior year…Connelly was Todd's coach on the field, anchoring a strong midfield for the Harbormen…A Pilgrim Conference All-star, Todd says Connelly—and fellow captain Steve Skinner—was responsible for the team's impressive turnaround following spring vacation…The senior was one of five Hingham players to participate in the E Mass All-star game…Connelly will be one of the biggest losses felt by Hingham next season, but the midfielder plans to continue his lacrosse career at Mercy Hearst College in Pennsylvania. Hingham coach John Todd: "The kind of captain and player Matt is, is what we expect from the kids at Hingham. He was a great captain and leader who understood what we needed to do and was able to bring the kids along. He led by example on the field and transferred that over to the kids."

Connor Fitzgerald - Junior
Attack - Hingham

Was Hingham's second leading scorer with 75 points on 39 goals and 36 assists this season…Three-year career stats find Fitzgerald with 112 points on 58 goals and 54 assists…Combined with fellow All-Scholastic Pat Lenhart for one of the most impressive attacks in the state…Fitzgerald's stellar offensive contributions were clutch not only during the Harbormen's impressive post-season—which ended with a State Championship—but also along Hingham's extremely challenging regular-season schedule against such teams as Weymouth…Fitzgerald is also a talented soccer player for Hingham High and will captain the team next season…Fitzgerald made key contributions as the leading scorer on the Southeast team's gold medal winning performance in this year's Bay State Games and played in the E Mass All-star game…The junior will be among the Harbormen's top returning players next season as one of the team's four captains. Hingham coach John Todd: "He and Lenhart were the perfect one two punch. They both averaged probably three points apiece per game. Connor is a great feeder, has great stick skills and a great fake to the goal and to his defenders."

Steve McDevitt- Junior (Capt.)
Midfielder - Scituate

After leading the Sailors in scoring each of the past two seasons, Steve finished second for the team title as a junior to Jared Dawson with around 40 points…became first Scituate High student to make Bay State Games team this summer, and tallied three goals and an assist in four games to help lead the Southeast team to a gold medal…only S.H.S. player named to Pilgrim Conference All-Stars, earning second team distinction…also a standout for Scituate in hockey and football…plans on attending a year of prep school after high school in the hopes of attracting more attention for collegiate hockey and lacrosse scouts… has been attending several lacrosse showcases over the summer…is slated to start at quarterback in football for S.H.S. this fall…younger brother of former B.C. High football star Kevin McDevitt…the high scoring center was a High Honorable Mention Mariner All-Scholastic in hockey this past winter… Scituate coach Chris Weber: "Steve's just an incredibly smooth player. He's the player everyone just tends to watch when he's on the field, even his own teammates. It seems he has the ability to raise his level of play against stronger competition, and that was definitely the case in the Bay State's."

Adam Grier - Junior (Capt.)
Midfield - Norwell

Finished second on the Clippers in scoring this spring with 41 points (32 goals, nine assists) in helping to lead the way to the first ever state tourney berth in the five year history of the program…a well rounded player who contributed in all important areas…doesn't shy away from contact despite giving away considerable pounds to many on the field, as witnessed by his team best total on ground ball pick-ups…second team Pilgrim Conference All-star…has played in several showcase tourneys this summer , including the Peak 2000 camp and in the Mass Bay Tourney…wants to play in college…little bother Jason is also a lacrosse and soccer standout for N.H.S. Norwell coach Jay Williams: "Adam was our most consistent offensive player, which isn't easy for a midfielder. He was a constant every game for us all over the field."

Eight Cohasset cyclists finish 192-mile Pan-Mass ride to thank the riders for their effort to finding a cure."

"I have probably told that story fifty times, and it still brings a tear to my eye," Vitello confessed.

In addition to the services they provide the riders, the volunteers contributed much needed moral support. The homeowners alongside the course also pitched-in in that respect by constantly cheering the cyclists on for what seemed like every inch of the nearly 200 miles.

"The support is so tremendous, you can't help but succeed with the crowds, the volunteers, and the whole spirit of the weekend," said Cohasset's Mike Kearney, smiling.

"They make the 192 miles that much easier," concurred Vitello. "I had chills the entire ride."

Nearly everyone of the cyclists dedicate their ride to someone who has survived, is currently fighting, or lost the battle with cancer.

Kearney, whose sister passed away to breast cancer last year, rode in her honor.

Robert Mahoney, who will be riding with Kearney, pedaled as a tribute to his mother-in-law, who died of cancer.

Clark rode in honor of, and with his friend Dave Drubo, a twelve year survivor.

Vitello went the distance in memory of his father-in-law, Bob Goyette, who died of cancer three years ago, and in honor of his mother, Mae Vitello, who has survived both breast and lung cancer.

In addition, everyone who made a donation to Vitello had the option of making it in someone's honor. The names they chose to honor were written on Vitello's shirt as he made the ride, so as to carry their spirit through the course.

"Everyone is motivated for different reasons," said Vitello, "but it is all for the same cause."

The other Cohasset riders are Mike Fechter, Jeff Goldstein, Ken Loffredo and Susan McMackin.

Cohasset Sailing Club junior racing results

The Cohasset Sailing Club racing program has had a busy season competing in junior regattas in Boston, Marblehead, and around the South Shore. Second-year racing coach, Pat Rynne, reports that the team has more than doubled in size this year, and that the competitiveness of our junior sailors has improved over their successful 2000 season. The club is committed to providing a top notch-racing program for Cohasset's junior sailors, and this year outfitted the two Club 420 boats with new racing sails, and hired another experienced junior racer, Erin Clancy, to serve as the Assistant Racing Coach.

FINLAY CUP

Last month the MassBay Triple Handed Regatta for the Finlay Cup was contested at the Community Boating Center in Boston. Racing in Rhodes 19's against teams from the Scituate Frostbite Club, Pleon Yacht Club, Hingham Yacht Club, and Boston Community Sailing, the crew of Owen McDonald, Caroline Henderson, and Toby Norman sailed competitively with finishes of second, third and fourth places in the races held during the one-day event. Coach Pat Rynne was very pleased with the 3rd place overall finish against very experienced teams.

WASSER CUP

In the summer long Wasser Cup racing series, sailors in the Captain and Sailing Master classes have raced every Wednesday afternoon to practice their competitive skills. The races have all been close and well sailed with many teams still having a chance to win the Cup this summer. In racing through last week, the results are:

First: Jon McCarthy, Kurt Gritzan and Emilie Shea
Second: Alex Hunt, Ben Massotta and Tristram Norman
Third: Cassie Rosano, Michelle Lemaire and Marissa Evans
Fourth: Thomas Ross, Colin Smith and Elizabeth Landon
Fifth: Chris Reynolds and Toby Norman
Sixth: Matt O'Connell and Ben Libby

STANTON SERIES

The family racing competition held on Sunday evenings at 5 p.m. got off to a great start on July 8. Seven boats raced in conditions that shifted from strong winds to light breezes during the races. The parent-child teams sailed four very close races with three different boats winning at least one race. The results of the July 8 races were:

First	Lemaire family
Second	Crough family
Third	Porter family
Fourth	Musto family
Fifth	Kusek family
Sixth	Shipp family

All club members are invited to come out Sunday, Aug. 19 to sail the final races of the season, and enjoy a cookout at the club after the races.

HINGHAM JUNIOR REGATTA

In the first local regatta of the year, ten junior racers attended the Hingham Junior Regatta, sailing in Club 210's and Turnabouts. The team of Owen McDonald and Toby Norman faced very tough competition in two days of Club 210 racing in Hingham Bay. In conditions ranging from high winds and big swells to very light air, the pair sailed well against crews with much more experience in racing Club 210's. By surprising many of the other boats with their successful starting tactics, Owen and Toby finished 12th in the fleet of 29 boats.

In the Turnabout fleet for younger sailors, four crews from the Sailing Club raced in the 12-boat fleet. For many of the sailors, this was their first regatta, and all of the crews gained valuable experience in this competitive event. The top Sailing Club boat was sailed by Matt O'Connell and Ben Libby, who finished in eighth place. They were closely followed by the crews of Jackie Flint and Emilie Shea, in ninth place. Cassie Rosano and Marissa Evans in 10th place, and Alex Hunt and Michelle Lemaire in 11th place.

Cohasset swim team ends perfect season

Connors, R.; 6th: Stevenson, G.) and the girls took first, third and fourth positions. (1st: Meehan, S.; 3rd: Lehr, T.; 4th: Micklebam, A.).

Individual medleys

The 100-yard individual medleys were more of a challenge than the relay medleys. In each of the first three races, K of C held Cohasset to second place finishes (boys: 12 and under: 2nd: Conway, C.; 3rd: Musto, C.; 4th: Doonan, P.; girls, 12 and under: 2nd: Durkin, J.; 5th: Swain, K.; 6th: Fortin, S.; boys, 14 and under: 2nd: Berg, P.). The fourteen and under girls were pushed back further into third, fourth and fifth places (3rd: Anderson, C.; 4th: Daley, M.; 5th: Lehr, B.). The seventeen and under boys also just missed the win (2nd: Faber, S.; 3rd: Ingber, D.), but the girls provided a more hopeful finish to the medleys with a win from Grace Jacobucci (1st: Jacobucci, G.; 3rd: Orsini, M.; 5th: Hurley, K.). K of C had pulled back to within one point of Cohasset, with 83 points to Cohasset's 84.

The eight-and-under boys started well in the 25-yard freestyle with first, second and fourth place finishes (1st: Durkin, T.; 2nd: Durkin, J.; 4th: Campbell, B.). The girls just missed the win, but took second, third and fourth places (2nd: Fontaine, E.; 3rd: Michalowski, A.; 4th: Murphy, C.). The ten and under boys had more trouble, with their heat, finishing fourth, fifth and sixth (4th: Porter, T.; 5th: Ulmer, W.; 6th: Queenan, C.). But the girls pulled back again to finish the event with a win from Sammy Lehr and third and fourth place finishes from Caitlin Mahoney and Kaitlin Ryan (1st: Lehr, S.; 3rd: Mahoney, C.; 4th: Ryan, K.).

Going into the 50-yard freestyles the 12-and-under boys took second, third and fourth places (2nd: Zappolo, N.; 3rd: Dickinson, R.; 4th: Doonan, P.) and the girls followed with second, fourth and fifth position finishes (2nd: Garber, C.; 4th: Englander, E.; 5th: Previte, M.). The pattern continued with the 14 and under boys and girls who finished second, fourth and sixth and second fourth and fifth, respectively (boys: 2nd: McCarthy, D.; 4th: Roach, K.; 6th: Porter, N.; girls: 2nd: Lehr, B.; 4th: Faber, A.; 5th: Musto, L.). The seventeen and unders continued the struggle, in each race, missing the win, but with the boys taking second, third and sixth place, and the girls taking third, fourth and fifth places (boys: 2nd: Ingber, D.; 3rd: Tehranian, K.; 6th: Cunningham, C.; girls: 3rd: Regan, D.; 4th: Jerome, L.; 5th: Foley, T.). Cohasset had now slipped behind by fifteen points (Cohasset 121, K of C 136).

Butterfly event

In the butterfly event the eight-and-unders again raised the home team's spirits and got them back on track with a win in both the boys and girls races (1st: Shipp, M.; 3rd: Carrier, J.; 4th: Durkin, T.; girls 1st: Musto, L.; 3rd: Karski, E.; 4th: Murphy, D.). The ten and under boys and girls followed suit with first place finishes in both their races (boys: 1st: Doonan, B.; 4th: Stevenson, G.; 5th: Ofsthun, C.; girls: 1st: Lehr, T.; 2nd: Mahoney, C.; 5th: Micklebam, A.). The twelve and unders were held to second place finishes (boys: 2nd: Conway, C.; 3rd: Dickinson, R.; 5th: Doonan, P.; girls: 2nd: Garber, C.; 3rd: Herman, L.; 4th: Englander, E.), but with the 25-yard butterflies complete, Cohasset had reduced K of C's lead by eight points.

In the 50-yard butterflies Parker Berg set the pace with a win in the fourteen and under race. The 14-and-under girls missed the win, but took second, fifth and sixth places (2nd: Daley, M.; 5th: Ogrodnik, M.; 6th: Faber, A.) and the seventeen and under boys finished second and third (2nd: Ingber, D.; 3rd: Blackburn, C.). But again Garet Jacobucci stepped in to win the girls' race (1st: Jacobucci, G.; 3rd: Orsini, M.; 5th: Jerome, L.) and end the event on a high. Cohasset had shaved another critical point off K of C's lead.

The breaststroke was the next event and right away the eight and under boys and girls went to work to secure wins in both the boys' and girls' races (boys: 1st: Buckley, T.; 4th: Campbell, B.; 5th: Shipp, M.; girls: 1st: Fontaine, E.; 2nd: Axelson, D.; 4th: Donohue, M.). The ten and under boys finished in second, third and fourth position and the girls pushed ahead to win their race (boys: 2nd: Ulmer, W.; 3rd: Porter, T.; 4th: Ofsthun, C.; girls: 1st: Lehr, S.; 5th: Teague, K.; 6th: Sullivan, O.).

In the 50-yard event Alexander Hunt led the way with a win in the 12 and unders race (1st: Hunt, A.; 3rd: Zappolo, N.; 4th: Musto, C.), and the girls kept up with a first for Lindsay Durkin (1st: Durkin, L.; 3rd: Swain, K.; 5th: Fortin, S.). The fourteen and under boys finished in second, fourth and fifth places (2nd: Roach, K.; 4th: Faber, A.; 5th: Gammon, B.) and the girls took second, third and fifth (2nd: Anderson, C.; 3rd: Faber, C.; 5th: Hurley, C.). The seventeen and under boys and girls produced excellent finishes to win both their races (boys: 1st: Faber, S.; 5th: Blackburn, C.; girls: 1st: Shea, E.; 2nd: Foley, T.; 3rd: Hurley, K.) and to push Cohasset back into the lead. Cohasset had now accumulated 224 points to K of C's 213.

Heroic performance

With one more individual event to go, the eight-and-under boys put in another heroic performance to take first, third and fourth places in their race (1st: Carrier, J.; 3rd: Shipp, M.; 4th: Buckley, T.). The eight-and-under girls went further, shutting out K of C and taking first, second and third places (1st: Karski, E.; 2nd: Michalowski, A.; 3rd: Musto, L.). The ten and under boys were less successful in their event (3rd: Connors, R.; 5th: Queenan, C.; 6th: McCormack, T.), but the girls charged home to take the win (1st: Meehan, S.; 3rd: Ryan, K.; 4th: Mahoney, M.).

In the 50-yard races, Cohasset had continued success with first place finishes for the 12-and-under boys and girls (boys: 1st: Hunt, A.; 3rd: Shipp, A.; 4th: Muir, K.; girls: 1st: Herman, E.; 4th: Sacks, M.; 6th: Teague, M.). The fourteen and under boys missed the win, but took second, fourth and sixth place (boys: 2nd: McCarthy, D.; 4th: Berg, P.; 6th: Faber, C.) while the girls finished third, fifth and sixth (girls: 3rd: Daley, M.; 5th: Harrington, B.; 6th: Shea, E.). The 50-yard races ended with a second and fourth place finish for the boys (2nd: Tehranian, K.; 4th: Blackburn, C.) and another impressive win for the girls (1st: Jacobucci, G.; 4th: Regan, D.; 5th: Musto, L.).

With only the free relays left, Cohasset was still ahead, but by only nine points. The win was still very much up for grabs.

As the relays began, the eight-and-under boys and girls put in their usual excellent performances to take first place in both their races (boys: 1st: Durkin, T.; Durkin, J.; Buckley, Carrier; 3rd: Mahoney; Murphy, C.; Durkin, Je.; Murphy, J.; 4th: Carpenter, C.; McCormack; Culhane; Faber; girls: 1st: Karski; Musto; Michalowski; Fontaine; 3rd: Berbe; Farren, A.; Axelson; Kucinski; 6th: Carrier; Farren, N.; Teague, M.; Kelly, K.). Cohasset was now 17 points ahead, but this was not the time to rest on their laurels. In the ten and under event, the visitors came right back with a win in the boys race (2nd: Ulmer; Stevenson; Porter; Doonan; 4th: Ofsthun; McCormack; Queenan, Connors), reducing the differential to 13 points.

The ten-and-under girls were next up and went straight to work to recover Cohasset's position with first, fourth and fifth place finishes (1st: Lehr, S.; Lehr, T.; Mahoney, C.; Meehan, S.; 4th: Asnault; Coggins; Dunn, Hunt; 5th: Dickinson; Jennings; Madge; Zappolo). The twelve and under boys swam well too, but missed the win, taking Cohasset's lead back to 13 points (2nd: Hunt; Dickinson; Zappolo; Conway; 3rd: Cunningham; Drybanski; Faber; Porter; 5th: Muir; Kuppens; McCarthy; Wheelwright). The meet could still go either way, but the twelve and under girls swam a close race to finish first, and the home team was now 17 points ahead (1st: Hernan; Garber; Englander; Durkin; 4th: Campbell; Hurley; Regan; Swain; 5th: Tehranian; Smith; McBride; Guince). Cohasset was now more or less home free. The spectators, of course, didn't know this, and the final two races had supporters from both camps crowding the edges of the pool to cheer on their 17 and under swimmers.

Final scores

The event ended with powerful performances from all the swimmers, but K of C finished strongly to take first place in both the girls' and boys' races (boys: 2nd: Tehranian; Blackburn; Faber; Ingber; girls: 2nd: Jerome; Orsini; Foley; Regan; 4th: Harrington, K.; Lieb-Lappen; Muir; Faber; 5th: Hurley, C.; McCarthy, K.R.; Muir; James). Supporters waited anxiously to hear the final tally that would decide the outcome of the meet and after a brief pause, in what had been an oppressively hot afternoon, the final scores were announced. Cohasset 316; K of C: 307. The home team had won the meet and finished the 2001 summer season undefeated.

What a successful summer it has been for the Cohasset swim team. In terms of their record, they finish the season with a clean sweep, and go into the Championship week having beaten the one team that defeated them last year. But there have been other successes. In six short weeks more than 170 swimmers have made friends, learned new skills, and been part of a wonderful team experience. The Cohasset Swim Team has become an institution in the town. Many children will look back on it as the defining experience of their summer vacation. Thanks to the support of so many parents and the leadership of Alison Hughes and her coaching assistants, Cohasset looks forward to many more successful seasons.

Man charged with exposing himself

A 40-year-old Salem dentist, who was staying with a friend in Hingham, faces charges of open and gross lewdness after allegedly exposing himself to a woman on Sandy Beach over the weekend.

William F. White and his friend Bradford K. Hurd, 37, of 180 Fort Hill St. in Hingham were charged with public drinking following the initial report of about a man exposing himself at the beach at 4 p.m., Saturday.

When police went to the beach, the witness was reluctant to provide a statement. But police arrested White and Hurd for public drinking, a town by-law violation.

However, later that day the lifeguard provided police with details of the alleged incident. The alleged victim and her husband also went to the police station and talked with sexual assault Officer Shellee Peters.

At the request of Cohasset police, a summons was issued on the new offense at White's arraignment at Quincy District Court on public drinking charge.

White is scheduled to return to court for a pre-trial hearing Oct. 1. The charge of public drinking against Hurd was dismissed, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

Beach patrols are increased

Police plan to have a greater presence at Sandy Beach, to alleviate residents' concerns about safety there, Sgt. Robert Jackson said. Saturday, a man was arrested after allegedly exposing himself to a woman at the beach. In an unrelated incident earlier last week, police investigated reports of that a 40-year-old man was hanging around and approaching children and making people feel uncomfortable. Police investigated but found nothing to charge the man with. However, the man's car, which had no sticker, was towed and police issued him a no-trespass order to keep away from the beach.

Youths arrested

Police arrested four teenagers from Westwood Friday night, who were parked in an SUV at the rear corner Shaw's Plaza parking lot. Investigation at the scene revealed open containers of beer and a 30-pack of beer. One of the teenagers also had a small amount of marijuana in his possession.

Arrested on charges of minor transporting alcohol were: Hillary A. Taglienti, 17, of 88 Westchester Dr., Westood; Patrick M. Moore, 18, of 168 Mill St., Westwood; David D. McDonough, 18, of 76 Greenacre Road, Westwood; and Mathew M. Anderson, 18, of 101 Lakeshore Dr., Westwood. McDonough was also charged with illegal possession of Class D (marijuana).

Taglienti was put into a diversion program prior to arraignment and will have to pay $50 to MADD. The charges against Moore, McDonough and Anderson were continued without a finding for three monthsIf the stay out of trouble the charges will be dropped at that time, Sgt. Robert Jackson said. . They were also required to pay $85 in court costs.

Drumming up a career

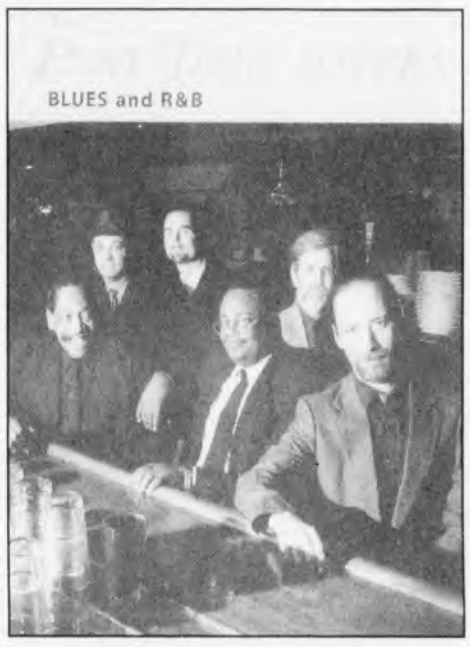
Braintree's Brian Kelley and The Part Time Lovers have a feel for the blues

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

They may be Part Time Lovers, but their love for playing jazz/funk infused blues is a full-time gig.

They are the members of the band The Part Time Lovers, managed by drummer and Braintree native Brian Kelley, and they're celebrating the release of their second album "Down for the Ride."

The band's growing number of fans are catching on to the group's upbeat, soulful, funky style.



"The album seems to be doing well," said Kelley. "We've been selling a lot of them at gigs. That's where we sell most of them."

Band members for The Part Time Lovers include Cole Grinnell (bass), Stephen Matthews (vocals), Ron Chancey (guitar), Ken Cook (piano, organ), and Bruce 'Goose' McGrath (tenor).

Kelley said the new album is "a departure from the last record" in the fact that there are more original songs on the new release. The first album was a compilation of covers of old blues classics including "The Thrill is Gone" by B.B. King.

"On the new album, we also tried to develop more funk stylings, among other kinds of music," Kelley said, adding jazz and Latin music influences were also incorporated into the songs on the new record.

"It's basically a whole mix of things," he said. "I think one of the reasons for that is because everyone in this band has a distinct musical personality. If I had to describe the album as a whole, I'd say it's a real feel type of music, very soulful. But what we're ultimately trying to get across is that we're a funk band."

The Part Time Lovers have been playing for about 10 years. Kelley joined up with the group about six years ago. Since that time, he's been the drummer, but he's also been in charge of leading the group and taking care of all the management responsibilities like booking shows, and taking care of band business.

Kelley obviously has a knack leadership, because The Part Time Lovers have been busy this summer, playing about four nights a week on average.

And even though it may appear that Kelley has a lot to do, it does not stop him from playing with his other band called The Brian Kelley Quartet, a straight-up jazz group. This summer, he's performed twice a week with the quartet in addition to working with The Part Time Lovers. Kelley also has his own self-titled solo album called "Ketchup and Rivets," a collection of songs and music styles close to his heart.

"Everybody in The Part Time Lovers freelances," Kelley said. He added that he recorded "Ketchup and Rivets" at the same time the Part Time Lovers were recording the new album, and he noted it was a lot of work to be bouncing back and forth between recording sessions.

Aside from his live-music ventures, Kelley also has another side job—he teaches drums at DiCenso's Drum Shop in Quincy, and he has been doing so for the last five or six years.

"I don't know how I fit everything in," Kelley said. "Between the gigs, the teaching, the practicing, and the recording, I just find the find the time to do all of it. Music consumes my entire life and existence." Kelley said his passion for music began at an early age while he was growing up in Braintree.

"When I was five years old, I noticed I liked music, and I spent a lot of time listening to it," he said. "But as I listened, drums became more fascinating to me."

Over the years, Kelley played the drums, and kept getting better and better at them. He started joining bands, and the rest is history. Kelley said he has been in other bands including The Yard Rockers, and recently, he played on a new album by a rock band called Aunt Mary's Breath. He said that album is still in production.

But Kelley said his role as part of The Part Time Lovers is one he's very happy with.

"The people I play with in that band are very inspirational to me," he said. They are all tremendous musicians, and I learn something new every time I play with them."

And while musically he's on the right track, Kelley said he has other goals to achieve.

"Ultimately, I'd love to get a teaching position at a major college for music," he said. "And I'd like to put out another record under my own name. I'd also like to continue to play out as much as possible, and do a little more traveling with The Part Time Lovers. Most of our jobs are around New England right now. But either way, I'm very happy to be doing what I'm doing—I'm making a living as a working musician."

For more information on The Part Time Lovers, log onto the website at www.parttimeloversband.com. The band's new album can be purchased at any of their shows or on the website. The Part Time Lovers have two local gigs coming up—one at the Bridgewater Town Gazebo on Aug. 12 from 6-8 p.m., and one at the Pembroke town gazebo on Aug. 19, from 6-8 p.m.. For information about the Brian Kelley Jazz Quartet, e-mail Kelley at Brian_kenetzero.net. His jazz band's album is available at Border's Book stores in Braintree, Kingston, and Cambridge. A tribute in Taffeta

Quincy dinner theater serves up a taste of the '50s

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Elvis Presley, Buddy Holly and Little Richard may come to mind first when you think of 1950s music. Some people, however, remember that decade more for its girl and doo wop groups and pop icons like Dinah Shore, Patti Page and the McGuire Sisters.

The Quincy-based J.M. Productions Dinner Theater at Raffael's is currently presenting a tribute to the era's easy listening chart-toppers with "The Taffetas," a musical revue that plays like a love letter to the 1950s.

As the show opens, Ike and Mamie are in the White House and Debbie Reynolds and Eddie Fisher are still planning on living happily ever after. Meanwhile at a live broadcast of the fictional "Spotlight on Music" program, four sisters from Muncie, Indiana - Cheryl (Debi Habib), Peggy (Valerie Clark), Kaye (Brenda Chase McColgan) and Donna (Ellen Spadorcia) – are making their national television debut as the "The Taffetas."

Wearing dresses of sky blue taffeta, naturally, and sporting bouffant flips with matching bows, the four sweet-as-sugar sisters present a present a program of well-known songs from their opener "Sh-Boom" to "Mr. Sandman," and several clever medleys that showcase their well-rehearsed four-part harmonies

The Travel medley that closes the first act brings the quartet together for everything from "Around the World in 80 Days" and "Little Grass Shack" to "See the USA In Your Chevrolet." Equally entertaining is the second act's "Boys Medley" which intercuts "Johnny Angel," and "Old Cape Cod" with "Where The Boys Are," sung by Brenda Chase McColgan in her very best Connie Francis style, and a touching "This Is Dedicated To The One I Love," performed beautifully by Valerie Clark.

The girls also take a break from the music to answer questions from the audience in a humorous bit that seems only there to pad a show that, with intermission, runs a scant 70 minutes.

Director Doug Trudeau has traveled north from his Scituate-based Showstoppers troupe to helm this production and provides clever and crisp direction that keeps the action interesting even on Raffael's limited "stage".

Musical Director Donna Bacherman does a fine job as accompanist, but would benefit from period garb for those moments when the girls involve her in the act.

A final personal aside to my opening night table mates: the first names of the McGuire Sisters are indeed Phyllis, Christine and Dorothy. You were right! P.S. There is another Dorothy McGuire who is an actress best-known for films like "The Spiral Staircase."

("The Taffetas" will be performed at Raffael's, Enterprise Drive, North Quincy, through Aug. 23. For tickets and information, please call 617/328-1600.)

Toiling in oils and pastels

Norwell artist enjoys success of Boston show

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

The career of Norwell-based artist Patricia Gray is moving right along. Gray was the featured artist at last weekend's Pembroke Art Festival, she teaches classes at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset, she's frequently commissioned to do paintings, and she's got a brand new show of her own being exhibited at the Landmark Building in Boston showing through Aug. 25.

"It's a great place for a show," Gray said. "The exhibit is a combination of pastels and oils, all of them landscapes. It's a show about nature. Many of the paintings have marsh themes or beach themes," Gray said there are 20 paintings in the show.

As for her work, Gray said her mediums are pastels and oils — nothing else. She initially started painting with oils about 25 years ago before her first child was born.

"I was always an oil painter in the beginning," she said. "But when I had a baby, there was no time to paint with oils. There was too much clean-up involved. I was frustrated with the lack of time. I didn't want to give up painting at that point so I bought a couple of pastels so I could keep doing something."

Now Gray has more than 6,000 pastels in her collection, and the medium has become as much of a part of her work as oils ever were.

Gray said the current show at the Landmark Building reflects her love for both mediums. She added it was kind of a funny story on how she picked the location for the show.

Gray said her husband actually works in the building, and she actually did a show there once before in 1991. But as time went by, more and more New York artists were featured at the facility to the point where Gray felt more Massachusetts artists should be displayed there.

"I felt really strongly about that," she said. Now, many artists from the South Shore Art Center get to display their work there, including Gray, who is a member of the center.

Gray said she feels good about showing her work these days, as she said she's improved over the years.

"I think my work has a little more depth these days," she said, "a little bit more soul. The longer you work at painting, the better your work starts to look.. I'm always trying to push a painting to its limits, and I like them to look rich, thick, and wonderful."

Gray said she's been getting some good feedback on the show, and she's also been selling a number of her paintings.

"You just do your work and you hope that what you're doing has some sort of affect on people," she said.

"Calm at Water's Edge," pastel on sanded paper is one of 20 paintings Norwell artist Patricia Gray has on display at Boston's Landmark building through Aug. 25.

Gray said she has worked hard for a long time in order to get to this point in her life, and she feels that the current show is one of her best to date.

"Painting is something that takes dedication," she said. "You've got to try to work at it every day. I've also always been an observer, which I think is important. You've got to be looking constantly on the amazing impact of nature."

For more information on Gray's show, call the South Shore Art Center at (781) 383-2787. The Landmark Building is located at 160 Federal Street, Boston, Massachusetts.

Simple, perfect Sangria

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Simple, Perfect Sangria

Sangria is a sweetened, fruity wine-based punch usually fortified with orange liqueur. It may also contain brandy, soda or sparkling water, sweet vermouth or port, and even tea or lemonade. Bad sangria is swill-a saccharine fruit punch laced with a bitter undercurrent of orange peel-, whereas well-made sangria is a delicate balance of fruit, wine, liqueur, and sugar.

The first thing to be settled was the type of wine. Prior testing done in our kitchen at Cook's Illustrated magazine indicated that when it comes to sangria, expensive wines are not as good as cheaper bottles. You want a light, fruity wine for this summer drink, not something redolent with the taste of oak and tannins.

I tried inexpensive bottles of Burgundy, merlot, zinfandel, and rioja as well as a Spanish grenache. (All of the wines cost less than $5 per bottle.) The merlot and grenache were fruity, the zinfandel acidic, and the rioja dull. The Burgundy, a Carlo Rossi jug Burgundy, was the winner- round and rich with lots of flavor. My second choice would be either a merlot or grenache. I also discovered that 1.5 liters of wine is the right amount, which means that a good jug wine, such as the Carlo Rossi, which comes in this size bottle, is ideal.

Next I tested orange liqueurs-Triple Sec, Cointreau, and Grand Marnier-using 1/4 cup per 750 milliliters (or half-jug) of wine. Grand Marnier was the strongest tasting, with a slightly bitter flavor. The Triple Sec contributed a sweet, orange-flavored punch to the sangria that was no more than acceptable. What I liked was the big, boozy flavor of the Cointreau since it boosted the overall flavor of the drink. I also tried adding brandy, vermouth, port, and even gin and felt that they simply complicated matters while offering no improvement in flavor.

As for the fruit, I made sangria with oranges, oranges and lemons, and oranges, lemons, and limes. For each 750 milliliters of wine I used a bit less than 1/2 cup of juice and ended up preferring sangria that used only oranges. The sour undertones from the lemons and limes got in the way of the other flavors. I tried using only freshly squeezed juice instead of whole slices but the sangria was lackluster-- bruising the orange rind with sugar released flavorful oils. Other fruit additions, such as peaches, berries, and grapes, simply crowded the glass and the flavor. Fillers such as soda or sparkling water were watery and merely diluted flavors.

Next I experimented with the sugar. I tried adding simple syrup, superfine sugar and plain old granulated sugar, all in 1/4-cup quantities, to the batch of sangria. The simple syrup was no better than the granulated sugar and, since it is more work, I opted not to use it. In addition, the granulated sugar dissolved perfectly well, so there was no need to use superfine. Finally, I wanted to see if a stay in the refrigerator would improve the flavor of the sangria. After a couple of hours, the flavors mellowed and became even more enjoyable. This improvement continued up to eight hours. However, at this point, the orange pieces must be removed for longer storage to avoid a bitter flavor.

THE BEST SANGRIA

Triple Sec may be substituted for the Cointreau in the recipe for a sweeter and less strong-tasting sangria. If you want to keep the sangria for more than eight hours in the refrigerator, strain out the fruit to avoid a bitter flavor.

2 oranges, washed, halved, and sliced

3/4 cup freshly squeezed orange juice from about 2 additional oranges

1/2 cup granulated sugar

1.5 liter bottle medium-bodied, fruity red wine, such as Carlo Rossi Burgundy, or an inexpensive merlot or grenache

1/2 cup Cointreau

Place the orange slices, juice, and sugar in a large pitcher. Bruise lightly with a wooden spoon until the sugar is dissolved, about 1 minute. Add the wine and the Cointreau and refrigerate for 2 to 8 hours. Stir and serve over ice.

Makes about 8 cups, serving 6 to 8

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

THURSDAY, AUGUST 9

Gear up for a hectic day. The Aries moon forms six major alignments to planets, all harmonious. That means that you can be most productive, if you are well organized. Energy and enthusiasm run high. An applying polarity of Mercury to Uranus warns against impulsive spending or decision-making, however. Take it slow and think things through. Planetary action promises an exciting, "anything can happen" kind of evening.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 10

Slow down, pay attention, drive with care this morning. The Aries moon becomes inactive at 12:53 a.m. Mercury forms a 180-degree alignment to Uranus at 10:58 a.m. Projects may take unexpected turns. Give greater attention to accuracy, details. Storm clouds move out at 2:23 p.m., when the moon enters earthy Taurus, and the green light for new starts goes on. A harmonious alignment of the sun and Mars occurs at 5:46 p.m. The evening is prime for all social activities, romantic adventures.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 11

A Taurus moon sets the stage for a relaxing weekend. It is best to start major ventures or make important purchases or decisions before 1:02 p.m., when the moon forms a harmonious contact to Venus. If you have work projects to accomplish, you can be most productive today. Influences are best, however, for kicking back and enjoying the good things in life.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 12

The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 3:53 a.m. This month's new moon will culminate next Saturday, August 18, at 28-degrees of Leo. Today the Taurus moon forms challenging 90-degree alignments to Uranus at 10:02 a.m. and Mercury at 6:32 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Don't get involved in power struggles with others; sidestep stubborn, obstinate behavior. Pursue favorite leisure activities; treat yourself to a day of rest and relaxation. At 10:59 p.m. the moon enters Gemini.

MONDAY, AUGUST 13

The combination of a Gemini moon and an applying sun/Uranus polarity sets a hectic pace today and tomorrow. Avoid rigid time schedules; things may not go as planned. It is better to handle a variety of jobs rather than one that demands mental precision and focus. People will be talkative and easily distracted from practical matters. Lunar alignments to Pluto and Saturn may generate emotional thunderstorms this evening. Keep it light. Choose your words carefully.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 14

The planet Mercury enters Virgo at 1:04 a.m., remaining there until August 31. This is an ideal time to focus on physical fitness, health, diet; start new programs to help you eliminate bad habits and take better care of yourself. A lunar alignment to Mars can make for a rough start to this day. Stop, look and listen. Don't take risks. Fortunately, storm clouds move out by 11:00 a.m. You can initiate projects between 11:00 a.m.-3:42 p.m., when the Gemini moon becomes inactive. This is an especially favorable period for communicating new ideas, launching sales and promotion campaigns.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 15

A polarity of the sun and Uranus warns you to expect the unexpected this morning. Allow extra time to get where you are going. Take it slow and easy. The moon enters the sign Cancer at 3:55 a.m., placing the focus on home, family, domestic responsibilities. The best period for launching important enterprises occurs between 12:30-3:50 p.m., when the moon aligns with expansive Jupiter. Share a special dinner with friends and loved ones this evening.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 16

If you plan to start major projects today, you must get them off the ground before 9:03 a.m., when the moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive. No major planetary activity occurs after that. The remainder of this day is prime for cleaning out the clutter, reorganizing, tying up loose ends. Take quiet time out for yourself this evening; meditate for inner peace.

Maintaining the landscape in high summer

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Brilliant flashes of lightning, a rumble of thunder, and the welcome sound of raindrops pelting against the windowpanes ushered in the first weekend of August. Mother Nature kindly delivered a little moisture to our thirsty plants and gardens just when many of them seemed on the verge of succumbing to our recent mini-drought. Throughout this growing season, rain has fallen on a fairly regular schedule, and in combination with slightly cooler than average temperatures, even those lawns which have not had the benefit of regular irrigation have managed to maintain a hint of the green carpet effect so many gardeners crave.

Unfortunately, many of us may have been deceived by the appearance of our lawns, and assumed that all our treasured plants were obtaining sufficient moisture, when, in fact, the month of July was significantly drier than normal. Combined with the five-week drought earlier this spring and our recent scorching heat, many woody plants, in particular, have started to show the effects of drought stress. Newly planted trees and shrubs may not have been able to adapt and may have even succumbed while some established plants have entered a premature dormancy. It is not uncommon for the foliage of many plants to wilt during the heat of the day, especially if exposed to direct sunlight, but if they do not recover at dusk or by early the next morning, they require immediate attention.

Most sprinkler systems do not provide adequate moisture to the deeper root systems of woody plants. For newly planted trees and shrubs or any woody plants showing the effects of drought stress, it may be necessary to form a shallow moat around the base of the plant and run a hose at a trickle to drench the root ball. Should your community have water restrictions which require hand-held hoses, small buckets of water can be gradually administered to this moat. Thoroughly soak the root-ball two to three times a week during dry periods and high heat. A watering can filled with a dilute, liquid soluble fertilizer may further help to revive languishing plants. If all the leaves have shriveled, scratch the bark of the branches with a fingernail; if there is fresh, green tissue beneath, you may be able to revive your plant. If all the leaves are crispy and the branches are dry, brittle and brown beneath the bark, your efforts are likely to be in vain.

Even some of our moisture-loving perennials have started to display brown, crispy foliage. The leaves on many of my clumps of tall garden phlox (P. paniculata) turned a sickly-looking lime green and brown, a condition which first became evident during the spring drought, which may actually have been more stressful to our plants than our recent heat and dry conditions. A closer inspection of the underside of their mottled foliage revealed a stippled appearance, a typical indicator of spider mites which thrive during periods of hot, dry weather. Severe infestations will produce tell-tale webs surrounding many of the leaves and stems. A stiff stream of water will dislodge the webs and help to alleviate the problem and an application of a light, horticultural oil is a safe and usually effective control for these microscopic pests which can barely be detected until much of their damage has been done. Daylily foliage is often susceptible to spider mites during the heat of summer, as well. Plants which exhibit mottled foliage should be investigated to determine the source of the problem or taken to your local nursery for their advice. Mites, in particular, can severely weaken even tough perennials making it more difficult for them to survive our challenging winters.

Lawns and gardens require a minimum of 1 inch of water per week during the active growing season. As a general rule, it is better to provide a deep, thorough soaking of your plantings once or twice a week, than to superficially water every day. Light sprinklings tend to cause plant roots to come to the surface looking for moisture, making plants more susceptible to drought, fluctuations in temperature, insects and diseases and eventually to winter damage. Heavy waterings promote deeper root systems where soil temperatures are cooler and plants are more likely to survive and thrive. Should your community be subject to water restrictions, try to focus your watering on one or two areas each time watering is permitted and thoroughly drench your plants rather than applying a light, superficial spray over your entire landscape.: When possible, water early in the day to enable plant foliage to dry off prior to darkness. Otherwise, powdery mildew and other fungal diseases, not to mention slugs and snails, are likely to flourish. When using a hand-held hose in the evening, try to water individual plants at the base rather than as an overhead spray. The acquisition of a rain gauge is an inexpensive, handy means of monitoring how much moisture your plants are receiving from the combined efforts of Mother Nature and sprinklers, but any straight-sided container can be used to collect water and a ruler inserted to determine the total accumulation.

The application of a summer mulch will greatly improve the moisture-retentive properties of your soil while reducing fluctuations in soil temperature. A 1- or 2-inch layer of shredded bark is an attractive and practical finishing touch to any garden or foundation planting with the added benefit of reducing weed germination. The time, effort and money expended to spread a layer of mulch will protect and rejuvenate your investment in plant material.

Stolen Cohasset property found in Hingham house

Hanover, Hingham police find goods in home of bank robbers

By Carol Britton Meyer and Ed Baker

While arresting four men in Hingham in connection with Friday's armed robbery of the Rockland Trust Company, Hanover and Hingham police officers believe they discovered property taken during a series of Cohasset burglaries last month.

Police arrested Anthony Miele, 28, Thomas Miele, 26, and Robert McCarthy, 24, all of 64 Rhodes Circle in Hingham, and Michael Bocchino, 30, of Quincy, Friday afternoon in connection with the bank robbery after Hingham Officer Darren McAdams saw a vehicle matching the described get-away car parked outside the house.

Cohasset Det. Rick Grassie said he was notified by Hingham police Saturday that upon searching the Hingham house, they had seen "items in the house not consistent with the items they were looking for, and realized it was stolen property from burglaries in Cohasset and Quincy that had been reported back in July."

In addition to cash, Hingham Police Chief Steven Carlson said police also found a computer, savings bonds, jewelry, coins, a passport, and clothing believed to have been taken during a series of burglaries at Stop & Shop Plaza in Cohasset last month.

Cohasset police said King Jewelers, Gear for Sports, Network Dynamics, Inc., and Pana Pesca all reported being broken into sometime on Sunday, July 22.

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan said they don't have enough evidence to charge the four men with the break-ins, but said they expect to charge them with receiving stolen property.

The name "Cohasset" says it all.

Derived from the Algonquin phrase "Quonahassit," meaning "long, rocky place," the town is both blessed and cursed to have been built upon a foundation of the hard rock. The dramatic ocean-front cliffs and little crowns of rock that poke through lawns throughout the town make it an aesthetic blessing. But it's a curse to anyone who has ever tried to squeeze in a septic system around a vein of granite, usually located just inches beneath the surface.

Love it or hate it, granite is a contributing factor to Cohasset's uniqueness, and a newly formed group is pushing for the preservation of the town's (in)famous granite ledges.

Called the Great Neck Ledge Preservation Group, the grass-roots organization is focusing on preserving 13.6 acres of land abutting Great Brewster Woods, while also raising awareness of other similar areas around town.

"When we destroy granite ledge, we are truly eradicating the essence of Cohasset."

Since Cohasset was originally subdivided in 1647, the wooded area between Little Harbor, the Town Common, and Sandy Cove has been known as Great Neck. About 25 acres of Great Neck is under the control of the Cohasset Conservation Trust, but the remaining 13.66 acres, most of which sits atop a granite outcropping overlooking Little Harbor, has been the focus of developers for nearly a decade, said group member Lincoln Bloomfield. Rumors have also been flying recently about a developer possibly filing a comprehensive permit with the town to allow a large-scale housing complex on the area.

"A number of residents have been attending meetings over a period of at least eight years with the Board of Health, Planning Board, Zoning Board of Appeals, because development plans kept coming up, and none of the boards have ever acted definitively," said Bloomfield, a Beach Street resident whose property abuts the area.

"The greatest thing about it was getting to know my neighbors better," he joked.

But what started out as a neighborhood contingent has now grown to include residents from the com-

New librarian arrives with references

Welcomes questions at reference desk

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Go ahead and try to stump Deirdre MacDermott with a question, she'll love you for it.

"There's no such thing as a stupid question," she says with a laugh.

But it's where the new reference librarian at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library looks for the answer that may surprise you.

Her first source won't be the Internet or an encyclopedia on CD-ROM — but the 2-1/2-in. thick, 1,000-page book of facts titled, "The World Almanac."

"I like to find information, so whenever I get a question — I have to know the answer," MacDermott says. "I get an Almanac for Christmas every year, it's the best book you can have in the house."

Location, location, location is the primary reason MacDermott, who came on board July 10, is becoming a familiar face at the library. MacDermott, her husband — a library media specialist with the Randolph Public Schools — and their two-year-old daughter are in the process of moving from Dorchester to Scituate. So for MacDermott, who is coming off a two-year "maternity leave" from work, the short commute to Cohasset will be a plus. When she saw the Cohasset position advertised, she jumped at the opportunity.

Returning to the South Shore is a true homecoming for MacDermott. As a young girl MacDermott lived on Hull Street in Hingham but because her mother, a nurse, worked the midnight shift at the hospital, she attended elementary school at the Jenkins School in Scituate where her grandparents lived.

MacDermott had no way of knowing at the time that those twice-daily car trips her mother and grandparents made back and forth between

Health Board told to butt out at Legion

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Town veterans ready to go to war to make sure smoking isn't banned in the George H. Mealy American Legion hall may be able to lay down their arms and light up their smokes.

The town Board of Health had recently questioned the legality of smoking in the town-owned legion hall building after receiving a complaint. A Cohasset bylaw passed in 1989 bans smoking in public buildings, and a recently passed state law bans it from municipal buildings. But the question before the board was whether the bylaw includes private clubs, which are excluded from the smoking ban, if the club is located in a public building.

The legion post pays $1 a year rent for use of the Elm Street building.

But in a recent opinion sent to the Board of Health, town lawyers said the state law that bans smoking from public buildings does not apply to the town-owned legion hall building because it is not occupied by a public group.

"In our opinion, [the law] indicates that the term public building is intended to apply to buildings which are occupied by public departments or agencies," wrote Richard Hucksam, a lawyer working for town counsel Paul DeRensis. "In our further opinion, the term public building does not apply to a building owned by a town which is leased to and occupied by a private entity."

Therefore, the opinion concludes, the legion post members can continue to puff away inside their building.

"In our further opinion, the term public building does not apply to a building owned by a town which is leased to and occupied by a private entity."
– Town counsel Paul DeRensis

Board of Health Chairman Stephen Bobo said he would recommend that no action be taken by the board on the matter. The board met last night after the Mariner went to press.

The opinion also said any smoking complaints should be made to the town zoning officer, in Cohasset's case, Bob Egan. Complaints involving only a restaurant, supermarket or retail food outlet should be heard before the Board of Health.

Route 3A repaving

MassHighway Commissioner Matthew Amorello notified the town last week that the state is ready to repave Route 3A from the Hingham town line down to the Beechwood Street intersection which was recently repaved. He said all that is needed are the proper permits from the Conservation Commission, and work will begin.

The entire stretch won't be paved, however – just certain stretches.

Amorello said the work, to be done by Aggregate Industries, Inc., will consist of stripping the existing asphalt, resurfacing, adjustments to existing drainage structures and application of thermoplastic pavement markings, as well as loaming and seeding where needed.

Summer Street ban

Summer street residents have asked selectmen to ban heavy commercial trucks from traveling down their narrow street. Town Manager Mark Haddad recently asked for an opinion on the matter from Fire Chief Roger Lincoln, Police Chief Brian Noonan, and Department of Public Works Superintendent Harold Litchfield.

The matter is scheduled to be discussed at Tuesday night's selectmen's meeting.

School van

School Superintendent Edward Malvey has awarded the contract for a new 14-passenger school bus to Coastal Bus & Equipment Inc., out of Rowley. The bus, which has been delivered, was purchased for $33,134.22 and will be used to transport smaller athletic teams and school organizations.

The historical society hopes it won't have to pay betterment fees on these two museums

Historical society frets over sewer betterment costs

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Historical Society is worried that its denied request for an abatement of sewer betterment costs for two Cohasset Village museums will place an undue burden upon the historically rich, but financially poor organization.

The society had requested an abatement since neither the Capt. John Wilson House nor the Maritime Museum has any plumbing.

"We can't afford it and will never use it," historical society president Martha Gjesteby said of hooking up to the town sewer lines. "There will never be a plumbing system there."

The town Sewer Commission originally approved the abatement "in concept" in April, conditional upon the society writing into the buildings' deeds that they would never have plumbing installed. However, upon reviewing the document, William Studzinski, working for town counsel Paul DeRensis, recommended against the deal. He said the society would reserve the right to release the restriction and hook up if it chose to pay the betterment, and also because the buildings could be in violation of state codes by not having plumbing.

State law says "all premises intended for human habitation, occupancy, or use must be provided with a supply of potable water," and also says "in a building where people are employed, hot water shall be provided."

"If CHS refuses to equip its facility with plumbing, the sewer commission should at least not be seen as concurring with that decision by accepting the restriction," Studzinski concluded.

At its July 26 meeting, the sewer commission said it agreed with town counsel's opinion and denied the abatement request.

The vote has been under examination, however, because it was revealed the commission had already voted to deny the request over e-mail. The letter sent to Gjesteby denying the abatement is dated July 17, more than 10 days before the commission's July 26 meeting vote.

At the request of the Mariner, the Norfolk County District Attorney's office is looking at whether the e-mail vote violated the Open Meeting Law.

However, the vote still means the society has to come up with the $3,000 betterment for the Elm Street museums, as well as another $3,000 for the society headquarters located at the Lothrop House on Summer Street. Because that house is inhabited by the society's curator, the society has agreed to pay that building's betterment.

"We're not happy," she said. "I don't see how we can put in sewerage and hot water and all that stuff. If we had to adhere to all that we'd have to close them up."

The Capt. John Wilson House was built in 1810 and given to the society in 1936. The Maritime Museum was built in the mid-1750s as a ship chandlery, and was originally located across from Bates Wharf, where the Olde Salt House now stands. The building was given to the society in the mid-1950s and was moved from the harbor to the village in 1957. It is the sole remaining 18th century harbor-area structure in near original condition in the town.

"These are original buildings. By adding plumbing it would be doctoring the integrity of the original building," argued Gjesteby. "There's no sewerage down in Plimouth Plantation in their separate buildings."

Museum curator David Wadsworth said he only occasionally will have a visitor ask to use a bathroom, and in that instance he has to send them elsewhere. Both buildings are open only for a few months in the summer, and for three hours a day.

Gjesteby said there is a spigot outside one of the buildings but it is used only by the Cohasset Garden Club, and is turned off in September.

The historical society met Tuesday and voted to ask attorney Richard Henderson, who had written up the deed amendment, to give his opinion of town counsel's opinion.

"We just don't have the money, and won't ever use it anyway," said Gjesteby. "If we were eventually going to put a system in, then fine, we'd pay it. But we just don't think it's necessary."

She said the society is funded solely by memberships and gifts.

"It's very difficult to get grants because a lot of the money is taken by libraries and the Museum of Fine Arts, and other big institutions," said Gjesteby. "Then the other attitude is that since we live in Cohasset, we must have a lot of money, and we don't."

Charges against coach surprise school, athletes

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Accusations of improper touching leveled against Cohasset High School coach and special education aide Lowell Mark Hall have come as a surprise to those who know him.

Hall has pleaded not guilty to sexually assaulting one teenage boy and assaulting another at a popular basketball camp held at New England College in Henniker, N.H., two weeks ago.

Cohasset Schools Superintendent Edward Malvey, said he is "surprised and disappointed" in the accusations, but added that "everyone is entitled to their day in court."

He said Hall, who has been active in the system's athletic programs for upwards of a decade, has been a quality employee of the Cohasset school department.

"He has fulfilled his responsibilities and done everything that's been asked of him," said Malvey. "From all indications, he is well liked."

Malevy said Hall filled in last year as a substitute for a math teacher, "and filled in admirably." Hall, who is not a certified teacher, has substituted on other occasions for a number of years, and most recently become a part-time special education aide.

Hall has also been a junior varsity basketball coach and a strength and conditioning coach with the football team.

Class of 1999 graduate Jim O'Sullivan, who played basketball under Hall, called him "one of the best coaches" he had ever played for.

"He is a very smart guy, and has been a positive influence on a lot of people," said O'Sullivan.

O'Sullivan said Hall's main strength was developing athletes.

"He takes guys that have a desire to work and get better and turns them into successful athletes," said O'Sullivan who added that Hall had helped him as a pitcher for the CHS baseball team.

Malvey also noted Hall's work with the school's athletes.

"He works well with the student athletes, and goes out of his way in terms of assistance," he said.

Malvey said he is not aware of any other complaints made by students involving Hall.

Although he said he is taking the accusations very seriously, Malvey is not rushing to judgement.

"This is a difficult time for all individuals that come in contact with children, whether its recreational, educational...Everyone nowadays is susceptible to charges," he said.

Malvey said he and CHS Principal Dr. Michael Jones have not yet made any decisions regarding Hall's future with the Cohasset school system.

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan said no one has come forward to complain, and that the department has not conducted any interviews.

"It's still ongoing, but we really don't expect to get a lot," he said.

Athletic Director Ron Ford deferred comment to Malvey.

Scituate plans MBTA rail suit

By Michael Marotta
MMAROTTA@CNC.COM

Scituate is planning to sue the T over the Greenbush project.

Selectmen filed a notice of intent with the MBTA this week, alerting the transit agency to the lawsuit the town plans to launch over the train project.

Claiming that the Final Environmental Impact Report (FEIR) for the proposed $408 million rail restoration does not adequately and properly comply with the Massachusetts Environmental Protection Agency's standards, the lawsuit will be filed by Oct. 5, at the Plymouth County Superior Court.

This is the latest wrinkle in what has been in a long-running dispute between the town and the MBTA over the rail project. Town officials have criticized the T for not addressing Scituate's environmental and safety concerns with the Greenbush line. Over the years, negotiations have been difficult, have stalled or broken down completely between the town and T. Scituate is not alone in expressing concerns with the FEIR which has been itself, years in the making.

Selectmen Joseph Norton did not wish to comment on the lawsuit, but has said in past interviews that the FEIR ignored repeated claims by town officials over safety concerns. Norton has floated the idea recently about taking legal action if the board deemed the FEIR unacceptable to the town.

The MBTA imposed a deadline of Aug. 10 to end public comment on the rail report. Requests for a public hearing on the report prior to the deadline, made by State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and selectmen from Scituate, Braintree, Cohasset and Hingham and the Weymouth Town Council in July have gone unanswered. The requests sent to state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand and Secretary of Transportation Kevin Sullivan was also forwarded to the Attorney General's office.

The Around Town news has slowed down a bit with the lazy days of Summer. Make sure to send me any of your wonderful Summer news; B-Days, celebration days, any happenings around town, news about any special friend or family who may be visiting and anything else that Cohasset would like to read. Also remember how much your children love to see their names and/or picture in the paper as well as the grown-ups who always say they don't!

APOLOGIES

I want to start this column with a huge apology to the Ketchum family from Red Gate Lane. I wrote about Brad Ketchum last week as a "Former Cohasset Resident" and I want you all to know(as I am sure most of you do) that they are alive and well on Red Gate Lane in Cohasset!!!!! I am so sorry for that mistake!

PONY LADY RETURNS

Great news for all of you who attend the Cohasset Farmers Market. This Thursday, the Pony Lady (Kim Ferguson from Shagbark Farm) will be back and a talented young lady, Anna Buckley, will be performing. Anna is only 10 years old and is a wonderful addition to the Market. It sounds like a great afternoon indeed! And by the way, Chester the Ballroom Jester will be in attendance.

CEREMONY FOR OLD GLORY

Cohasset Cadette Girl Scout Troop 4778 is collecting old/damaged American flags as a community service project. The flags will be honorably destroyed in a ceremony to be held at the Girl Scouts' town-wide encampment to be held at Camp Cedar Hill in Waltham, Sept. 14-16. Back to school, uggh. For some of us those words are music to our ears, for others, we just want to hang onto those hands of time! Just a reminder to all of us, now is the time to get all of those supplies that are needed because as I have found in the past, if you wait until the last minute, they are all gone.

A wonderful person and friend from town has given to me the idea of ending the column each week with a quote designed to make us think a little about what it means to us. If any of you have a quote that you think would be appropriate, please send them to me with the authors name.

"Be on doing what you want to do now. We are not living in eternity. We have only this moment, sparkling like a star in our hand — and melting like a snowflake."

Tour highlights history of farm

Holly Hill Farm will host a tour of its growing fields, barns and nearby woods on Sunday, Aug. 19. The program begins at 1:30 p.m. at the main barn just off the entrance to the Cohasset farm at 226 Jerusalem Road.

The program includes visits to the farm's greenhouse and current growing fields where visitors will learn about the principles of organic gardening and farming. The tour will also provide opportunities to learn more about the farm's history and its plans for the future. An optional walk along the farm's trails, through the woods and hayfields is also planned.

Farm Manager Martin Gursky and the Directors of Farm Operations, Frank and Jean White will lead the tour and answer questions. Several volunteers will also participate and answer questions.

Holly Hill Farm, which is owned by members of the White family is one of Cohasset's oldest active farms. Once the homestead of Henry Doane in the early years of the 19th-century, the farm, under the direction of Frank's father Dick White had, prior to its current usage, been the center of a vegetable-truck farm. Produce was sent nightly to the market at Faneuil Hall in Boston and later it served as the headquarters for a land-clearing and sawmill operation.

The farm's two main barns are believed to have been built in the 1780s and some of the other outbuildings around the time of the Civil War.

Besides serving as a "model for sustainable agriculture and organic farming," Frank White said, the farm's current goals include "becoming an educational resource for the area's schools and others."

As part of its commitment to community involvement, the farm to date, has conducted a small summer program for youths, an "introduction to farming" program for Cohasset's sixth-graders, a garden project at the Cohasset Middle-High School, and has also provided volunteer opportunities for adults.

"We hope, during the course of the tour, to discuss some of our plans for involving the community in the future," White said.

Visitors will get a chance to view the farm's rich crops as well as learn about the history of Holly Hill Farm on Sunday.

Holly Hill Farm's "Main Barn" is where Sunday's tour will begin.

Always in training

SHS Hall of Famer opens gym in Cohasset

By Michael Marotta
MMAROTTA@CNC.COM

Joe Hayes excelled in multiple sports during his career at Scituate High School in the early 1990s, so it's no wonder that now, as a personal trainer and training instructor, he's focused on working with athletes in every sport.

The Scituate High School Hall of Famer, who starred at football, track and wrestling during his days as a Sailor, is not your ordinary trainer. While spending time in Southern Florida attempting to make it in pro football, he established a rapport with many different trainers and fitness experts, and in the meantime continued a love for personal fitness, working with Anna Kournikova and Kobe Bryant, among others.

After returning to his hometown to be with his family, he worked at a gym in Norwell, where he began training 120 different athletes. Seeing the following he had, he decided to open up his own center in Cohasset, and Maxx Speed opened for business this past Tuesday, with many of his clients following him east.

"My gym is small, so I can pay a lot of attention to my athletes," Hayes said. "I'm just trying to tap into all different sports. I'd rather be doing what I'm doing now, owning my own business and dealing with many different athletes of different ages. Eighty percent of the people I train are athletes."

By eschewing health club training methods, Hayes trains his clients like the prototypical athlete in what he calls "functionally integrated training."

"Athletes have the best builds in the world," he said. "You can't compare to gymnasts bodies or even a track and field athlete, so why not train like that? The days of aerobics are over. Those classes are a waste of time. The people making gains in the gym are doing weight training."

Joe Hayes, has Deanna Brown, a Cohasset High School gymnast, throw punches to sharpen her reflexes and improve her footwork. Kristin Sheerin and Jason Brown wait their turn.

"Athletes have the best builds in the world. You can't compare to gymnasts bodies or even a track and field athlete, so why not train like that? The days of aerobics are over. Those classes are a waste of time. The people making gains in the gym are doing weight training."

Trainer and Maxx Speed gym owner, Joe Hayes

In addition to basic weights, Hayes uses Swiss balls and medicine balls, much like professional athletes.

The 29-year-old trainer knows a thing or two about sporting excellence. A member of the first-ever Scituate Hall of Fame Class inducted last year, he holds myriad state records. For football, he was the Massachusetts Player of the Year as a running back and kicker in 1991 and broke the state record for longest field goal. He was the wrestling state champion and runner up in New England and in track he set records in the 100 and 200 meter run while becoming state champ.

And athleticism runs in the Hayes family. His sister was a state track star and father ran the Ironman Triathlon four times and the Boston Marathon 12 times.

Hayes said he uses his decorated past in his training with his clients.

"It's important that the kids respect me," he said. "They see I can perform at that level, and I'm still kind of young, so they look up to me in that respect."

Donna Devin, who trains with Hayes along with her husband and three children, said Hayes is right at home in the gym.

"He's a great guy, a hard worker," Devin said, noting that her husband used to train with Hayes in Scituate while he was in high school. "His dream is to get that place going in Cohasset."

To Hayes, he's just continuing a level of excellence that he's always maintained on the field.

"Just like with sports, I'm trying to be the best at this," Hayes said.

No time for summertime blues

Anyone who grew up in the late 1950s and early 1960s, when the hippie wave was just beginning to ripple, probably remembers a song about a guy who couldn't find a job and had the summertime blues.

August is the time of the year to let the blues go.

The month gets its name from Augustus Caesar (so memorably played by Brian Blessed in that masterful miniseries about Rome, "I, Claudius").

Anything "august" is something to be looked up to, something inspiring awe or veneration for reason of rank.

August, according to the Gregorian calendar we follow (sponsored by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582), is the eighth month of the year.

Yet, in many ways, it ranks at the top of the year.

August is summer at its peak.

August in Boston brings the mercury to the top of the thermometer.

Find a sunny day when the beaches aren't crowded. That's as hard as finding someone who understands the ending of the dreadful new version of "Planet of the Apes."

Sales must peak of ice cream, spring water, and all the hot-dog-and-hamburger accouterments of a cookout.

Vacations cluster, and meeting moths find their number of get-togethers melting away.

Kids are out playing and enjoying summer programs.

If we're lucky, as we are this year, the Red Sox are competing for a chance to play in the post season.

Only a couple of days ago, August reminded us what a great game baseball is when Scott Hatteberg hit into a triple play and belted a grand slam in the very same game at Fenway Park.

If there is any time of the year when the frantic pace of our workday world lets up a bit, it is August.

Whether you have a job and are looking longingly out the window, wishing to be out there, or you are watching the want ads, longing for a job, wishing to be in there, this is not the month to have the blues.

This is the month to give yourself a break.

Don't be dragged down by the pavements we must pound or the chores we must do.

Harking back to that tune of the '60s again, every hit record has its flip side.

August is butterflies and sunburns, picnics and ants, fresh-air walks and swirls of auto exhaust.

If you add a little sunshine-yellow to the blues of summer, you come up with green grass to stretch out on and just watch the breeze scuttle the gray clouds away.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Private ways

TO SELECTMAN MICHAEL SULLIVAN

I would like to elaborate briefly on the Private Ways issue. Clearly, roads such as Fair Oaks Lane, Linden Drive, Old Pasture and Windy Hill roads should be public. We all know that zoning ordinances should be the device to control growth and development. All I was suggesting at Tuesday's (Aug. 7) meeting is that the Norfolk County Engineers should be asked to do detailed assessments of Private Ways such as the aforementioned in order to get the process moving.

It was particularly distressing to hear Selectman Brown acknowledge that after seven and one-half years, there is no process established to accept new roads as public streets. Selectman Brown volunteered to be the Selectmen's "lead" on both the War Memorial and Private Ways projects seven-plus years ago. The subjects will continue to fester until due diligence is done.

Lamberts Lane

TO THE BOARD OF SELECTMEN:

I watched the Selectmen's proceedings on cable July 24 concerning Lamberts Lane and although I feel the meeting was productive and the board understands our concerns and is trying to address them, a couple of things need to be clarified.

Michael Sullivan stated that there is a debate regarding Lamberts Lane's status, public or private. There is no debate. Lamberts Lane is a private road with public access. We have had Mr. Henderson and Mr. DeRensis in their capacity as Town Counsel give written reports stating this. We have the Town Clerk's certified letter. We have contacted Norfolk County which has no listing of Lamberts Lane as a public road (neither does Plymouth County). Finally, John Englander, an attorney and Lamberts Lane resident who did Mr. Sturdy's legal research on Side Hill Road in Hingham (this is the basis of the continued debate), has said before the Planning Board that he did no research on Lamberts Lane, nor did he ever see anything in his research on Side Hill Road that would lead him to believe Lamberts Lane is a public road. A few years ago the town acknowledged the private road status of Lamberts Lane by requesting an estimated cost by Norfolk County engineers for upgrading Lamberts Lane to public road standards, this is in the town's files.

If we continue to give credence to this theory, the responsibility for Lamberts Lane continues to be clouded. The town and the golf club need to work with the residents to deal with our issues of safety, traffic and noise control. We appreciate the help that the board is giving us, but Lamberts Lane will be an ongoing problem until all parties make a firm and continuous commitment to impact the concerns of the residents.

Train hearing

Bob Durand, Secretary
Executive Office of Environmental Affairs
Kevin Sullivan, Secretary
Executive Office of Transportation

We are writing in regards to the Final Environmental Impact Report for the proposed transportation improvements in the Greenbush Line Corridor. Previously, we have both requested a public hearing on this matter; to date we have not received a reply.

This project will have a significant impact on our districts and the surrounding environment. The outcome of this report will have a direct effect on our constituencies. After reviewing this project, there are still many outstanding issues relative to the proposed wetlands mitigation. Construction of the preferred alternative tunnel (underpass) through Hingham Square will impact the Town Brook and no doubt require waterways and wetlands relocation. Replication is proposed within the Town Brook Watershed We question whether there is sufficient land available within the watershed, especially since the right-of-way is so limited. Are there adequate non-wetlands within the Greenbush right-of-way to compensate for all the wetland alterations necessary to the project?

The West Hingham Station also has unresolved issues. This station abuts residential areas and the suggested wetland replication area appears to be some distance from the station. The Wetlands Protection Act, 301 CMR 10.00 states, "the replacement area should have an unrestricted hydraulic connection to the said water body or waterway associated with the lost area." Is this regulation being properly followed?

Furthermore, the Nantasket Junction Station appears to also have wetland issues. What replication areas are available and were other alternatives and mitigation possibilities considered? We feel these items have not been adequately covered in the FEIR. We do not consider these "small impacts" as the MBTA evaluation states, nor "minor" dislocations. We disagree with the MBTA classification of all CRR wetland impacts as negative but not at the "significant" level. All wetlands are considered important and significant, especially since they and other open spaces are rapidly disappearing under current development pressure.

We note that the MBTA has identified some eight vernal pools within Bordering Vegetated Wetlands. We have been informed that they have identified three additional probable vernal pods along the Greenbush Rail Corridor in Hingham. Further, these parties intend to submit applications for the certification of these pools to the Massachusetts Natural Heritage and Endangered Species Program. We would expect the MBTA to acknowledge and discuss these pools and any additional germane wetland information that it receives.

We hope that you will pay close attention to the issues we have raised. If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact us.

LIBRARY CORNER

Children's programs

The summer is over and the staff of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library want to thank all the children who participated in this year's reading program, "Score Big with Books." Every child who participated is invited to come to the library beginning Monday, Aug. 20, to pick up his or her reading certificate and a prize for effort in this year's reading extravaganza.

The library staff also extends thanks to people who helped the Children's Summer Reading Program run so well. Friends of the Library volunteer, Jamie William, who was instrumental in ensuring that the children's needs were met by arranging signage for the library and attending and assisting all of the summer children's programs. Thank you summer elf!

Thanks also to Marcie Welch who jumped onboard to help the library and is now staying for a year. Marcie helped with all the summer publicity for the children's programs and continues to help with the children's area. Look for Marcie in the fall.

Come in and visit the library. It's a great place to visit during the sweltering heat.

Golden buttons, wild carrots and a coffee to go

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

It is during these weeks of nature's abundance - when the growth is lush and entangling, when the fragrances are full-bodied, and when wildness can, in what seems to be the blink of an eye, take over even the most lovingly tended spaces —it is during these weeks that slices of neglected landscape — old pastureland, abandoned parking lots and roadsides — are spontaneously transformed into wildflower gardens. If I were in charge of roadway maintenance, I'd give our hardworking highway department employees these next few months off from mowing and weed-whacking to allow Mother Nature to do what she would if left alone - fulfill her destiny by giving us an explosion of flowers and color.

More than 1,500 different wildflowers live here in Massachusetts and many of our most common are aliens, foreigners arrived on our shores either purposely or as accidental tourists — and successfully established. Like people, wildflowers come in a whole range of appearances, habits and attitudes. Some are showy, others modest, some gregarious, others secretive, some simple, others complicated, some toxic, but most quite good company. While some wildflowers can make a home anywhere, others need their special place, a woodland of dappled sunlight, a spritz of salt spray or a mucky river embankment to thrive. Ask them to go against their nature and they'll wither and die.

If: there is any one quality I admire most about wildflowers, aside from their aesthetic beauty, it is their resilience. And few are as resilient as chicory, also known as coffeeweed, wild succory and blue sailors. This hardy perennial, with its stiff, nearly leafless (some would say scraggly) stems and milky juice, July-sky blue flowers spreading more than an inch across and deep, dandelion-like tap root, finds a foothold where little else can or will, sprouting happily from gravelly lots, cracks in sidewalk pavement and asphalt gutters, enduring drought conditions and searing sun.

Weed or wildflower?

Opinion is divided on whether chicory is a serious pest or an attractive wildflower. I vote for the latter but the categorizing of plants as wildflowers, weeds or herbs depends largely on who's doing the naming. You've heard the classic definitions of a weed — a plant that is growing where you don't want it to grow or a wildflower that people don't like. When it comes to wildflowers beauty and definition are, indeed, in the eyes of the beholder.

Chicory, a Eurasian native, is probably too common for its own good. It's everywhere and so, we take it for granted. But even its detractors have to admit that a mist of its flowers, a delicate heavenly blue, a tint far too rare in the home garden (in my humble opinion), is quite capable of stopping traffic. The flowers, which can occasionally be white and, rarely, pink, bloom from July through September and are unusual in their fleeting beauty. On sunny days the square-ended petals draw together and close up by midday. Those of us who have difficulty getting up and out in the morning will miss their superb display unless the day is overcast. Then, the open flowers stay with us into the afternoon.

Like people, wildflowers come in a whole range of appearances, habits and attitudes.

A member of the Composite family which includes daisies and asters, Cichorium intybus was popular with the early Romans who used the young leaves, a close relative of endive, as a salad vegetable, and with ancient Egyptians who believed the plant purified the blood and liver. The plant is today cultivated, easily from seed, in Europe and Egypt where its leaves - usually blanched first to remove bitterness - are still used in salads and eaten like spinach. Chicory is also a popular herbal remedy for jaundice, gallstones and rheumatism.

Even more useful than its leaves is chicory's root, used by early Americans as a coffee substitute and as an alternative to coffee during World War II when coffee shipments were disrupted. Kiln-dried, roasted and ground as a coffee additive and extender, caffeine-free chicory is, today, more popular in Europe than here at home though it has a faithful following in New Orleans and other southern regions. Another of chicory's innovative uses is as an ingredient in dog food. Shown to increase calcium absorption, chicory provides an important fiber source for dogs while helping to maintain strong bones.

Wild carrot

Fortunate is the roadside wanderer who finds the blue sailors mixed with fresh, unsoiled white puffs of wild carrot, a color palette with hints of old delft pottery. The name, wild carrot, tells us something about its relatives in the parsley family though it hardly does justice to the blossom clusters that are more poetically named Queen Anne's lace. An Old World invader, Daucus carota, has been successful in establishing itself in fallow fields and, like chicory, in the cracks of pavement. The plant, like chicory, also has its detractors, many of whom consider it the peskiest weed of all.

Either biennial or perennial, the wild carrot has an erect stem and fine-cut foliage and grows to a height of four feet. Its thick, woody root smells and tastes somewhat like a domestic carrot, though more bitter, and is high in vitamin A and fiber. Like the flowers of its caraway and poison hemlock relatives, the wild carrot's tiny blossoms are densely clustered in a flattened, umbrella-like head called an umbrel measuring up to four inches wide. The profusion of flowers forms a lace-like pattern, thus its common name, though the particular Queen Anne who lent her name to the plant has been lost to history. Characteristic of Queen Anne's lace is a tiny purple-colored jewel-like floret in the center of the lace.

As Queen Anne's lace ages, the umbels brown and curl inward forming; cup-like hollows that give the plant its popular country names, Bird's Nest or Bee's Nest. They make a nice addition to a dried flower arrangement.

Golden buttons

Add a colony of tansy to the roadside garden of chicory and Queen Anne's lace and you'll see why Monet so loved the blues and yellows together. Conspicuous in August and September, the dense clusters of round, flat yellow flowers identify tansy - Tauacetum vulgare - as another member, though a rayless member, of the Composite family (think of the ox-eye daisy without its white rays) and have earned it the folksy name, golden buttons.

A hardy perennial with pungently fragrant (though a hard to describe fragrance) fern-like foliage, tansy grows to a height of three feet. Used medicinally since the Middle Ages, infusions were thought to be effective in treating nervousness, epilepsy, fever and gout and in expelling worms. A poultice of tansy leaves was used for bruises and sprains, and Native Americans steamed the leaves in their foot baths. English country folk are said to have enjoyed a nip of tansy wine and tea. I am content to strip the foliage, dry the flower clusters and include them in a vase with Birds' Nests.

Many wildflowers, including Queen Anne's lace and tansy, come with cautions about their handling and ingestion. Though I have not had a problem with either plant irritating my skin, the Audubon Field Guide to New England lists both as poisonous. As for consumption, unless you are accompanied by an expert forager, the best advice is to let the wildflowers provide the spiritual cures and leave the physical cures to your favorite family doctor.

TOM HENSHAW

It used to be, as some folks would have it, that when the cops busted a suspect, they would disappear for a few moments with him and a rubber hose into a secluded back room and emerge with a confession, the I's neatly dotted and the T's tidily crossed.

Then came Miranda, and the fuzz had to inform the perp of his rights, that he didn't have to talk to them if he didn't want to, that he could have his mouthpiece present when they asked him if he had done it, and that if he didn't have a lawyer, they'd check the Yellow Pages under attorneys for him.

Before the suspect went to trial, the cops were tried to see if they violated any of the Miranda rules, and if they did, the perp was likely to walk, although they were not required to give him back the loot as he went by.

Now, in the state of Oregon at least, they're making it even tougher for the cops to arrest a miscreant. The state Supreme Court has ruled that they can't lie to a suspect or give him a fake name, even when they are conducting a hush hush undercover investigation of a drug ring or child pornography or the Mafia.

(No, Judge Maria Lopez was not involved.)

"I am a drug cop, please sell me some heroin. That's literally what's required," said Joshua Marquis, the district attorney for Clatsop (Ore.) County. "The only people who really like this situation, aside from the drug dealers, are some of the criminal defense attorneys in Oregon."

Actually, the Oregon decision forbids federal and state prosecutors from approving "deceitful" tactics on the part of field officers under penalty of getting yelled at or worse by the local bar association, and not many undercover operations are even started without the advice of counsel on a highly complex law.

If the Oregon decision is extended to the rest of the country, there'll be no more officers posing as cokeheads ready to buy the latest shipment right off the boat from Colombia or waiting to scoop up a ton or two of weed as it's trucked over the border from Mexico.

There'll be no more 40-year-old cops identifying themselves on the Internet as 14-year-old girls to round up another practitioner of child pornography, which is one of the high tech crimes that a family is apt to acquire along with its new Gateway PC.

Whatever you do, don't use "dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation" to catch these perps, and be sure to give them back their PCs or maybe the next decision of the Oregon Supreme Court will require you to apologize.

But don't expect them to do the same for you, especially after the federal appeals court in San Francisco ruled the other day that it is all right to swear at police officers since "criticism of the police, profane or otherwise, is not a crime."

The decision, said Oliver Vallejo, attorney for the former miscreant, "keeps police officers in check."

Therapy with horse sense

By Michael Marotta
MMAROTTA@CNC.COM

As doctors and therapists continue to explore new ways to treat children stricken with illnesses, one technique is off and galloping on the South Shore. And to find the curative, patients need look no farther than a horse stable.

Many parents who have children with physical disabilities, cerebral palsy or other diseases that affect motor skills, or neuromotor dysfunction are turning to hippotherapy — the use of horse riding for physical therapy.

Proponents of hippotherapy say it improves strength and balance in children stricken with these kinds of ailments.

"It's a program that has had tremendous success with kids because of the three dimensional movement that's involved," said Norwell resident Susan Donahue, a volunteer at the River Wind Farm in Pembroke, where hippotherapy sessions have increased dramatically in the past year. "Usually you have a ball or are working one-on-one with a child, but this has been able to convey three dimensional moment and it's been enormously successful."

The three dimensional movement of the horse provides a challenging activity that can improve a child's balance, strength, sensory processing and self confidence.

Usually, children will ride without a saddle to allow for a variety of positions on the horse. A sidewalker walks alongside the horse while the physical therapist works with the patient, and a horse leader steers the horse.

The South Shore Therapeutic Riding Program is the first of it's kind in the area, following the successful programs run in Andover and Bridgewater. The program is held at the River Wind Farm, owned by Carlo Casarano and located on the Pembroke-Hanover town line. The farm houses two horses, Peaches, a former Scituate resident, and Harvey.

The program was started in May 2000 by Cindy Spooner, a certified hippotherapist who decided to operate full-time when she noticed the demand the activity had generated. She provides hippotherapy service to approximately 20 patients per week, with most of the riders ranging in age from 3 to 13.

Left: Nicholas Baldassini,5, of Hingham gives therapist Cindy Spooner a high five while riding Peaches. Volunteer Lesley Beszterczey guides as the "sidewalker".

Donahue said that the treatment process is just more than riding horseback.

"It's very labor intensive," she said. "Some kids are picking up rings off a peg as they go by, and some are just laying down on the horse because they aren't capable of sitting up."

The riders can watch themselves in the mirrors located around the farm and Donahue said sometimes they forget about the therapy because they are so excited to be on a horse.

"It certainly has a big fun component to it, it's a great confidence builder and instead of dreading physical therapy it makes the kids proud," Donahue said.

It's a big deal for the others involved as well. Finding volunteers for the program has been troublesome, but Donahue said Scituate probably has given the greatest outpouring of support.

"Scituate's one of the strongest towns that volunteers," she said, adding that many of that town's volunteers who serve as sidewalkers are young and likely to tell their friends about it and get them involved as well. And the support of one volunteer goes a long way in helping a child dealing with a severe illness.

"It's having a cheerleader along," Donahue said of the sidewalkers. "It's not just to walk alongside for safety, but to help cheer the success because this is really courageous, it's hard work that these riders are performing."

Donahue said the program is always looking for volunteers and donations. With the help of organizations like the Genesis Foundation, a group that works with children with birth defects, they have been able to issue scholarships and keep the overall cost of the hippotherapy to a minimum.

"These families are already heavily burdened, so you try to make it as accessible as possible."

Donahue said she's sure the program will continue to grow, and she hopes to continue the success Spooner and the volunteers have experienced so far. And while she acknowledges the physical hippotherapy, she can't say enough about what it does for a child's confidence.

"For a lot of these kids, it's a half hour of freedom from a walker or a wheelchair," Donahue said. "It's a huge deal for them."

HEALTH NOTES

Heart disease is the number one killer of women and men in the United States. Each year, more than a million Americans have heart attacks, and about a half million people die from heart disease. Two of the major symptoms associated with heart disease are high blood pressure and high cholesterol.

Blood Pressure According to the National Institute for Health, more than 50 million American adults — 1 in 4 — have high blood pressure. About 60 percent of all Americans age 60 and older have it, which increases the risk for getting heart disease and/or kidney disease, and for having a stroke. It is especially dangerous because it often has no warning signs or symptoms.

Cholesterol Your blood cholesterol level has a lot to do with your chances of getting heart disease. High blood cholesterol is one of the major risk factors for heart disease. A risk factor is a condition that increases your chance of getting a disease. In fact, the higher your blood cholesterol level, the greater your risk for developing heart disease or having a heart attack.

Judy Fitzsimmons, the Public Health Nurse at the town hall conducts blood pressure screenings for anyone requesting it during her regular office hours: Monday, Wednesday and Thursday from 8:30 to 11:00 AM, and the second Thursday in the month, from 11:00 to 1:00 PM at the Senior Center of the Community Center; and on the Fourth Thursday, from 1:00 to 3:00 PM at the Senior Housing facility at 60 Elm Street.

More facts about high blood pressure. Most doctors will diagnose a person with high blood pressure on the basis of two or more readings, taken on several occasions. A consistent blood pressure reading of 140/90 mm Hg or higher is considered high blood pressure, another term for hypertension.

Some people experience high blood pressure only when they visit the doctor's office. This condition is called "white-coat hypertension." If your doctor suspects this, you may be asked to monitor your blood pressure at home or asked to wear a device called an ambulatory blood pressure monitor. This device is usually worn for 24 hours and can take blood pressure every 30 minutes.

Cholesterol screenings require taking a blood sample. The Town Health Nurse conducts free cholesterol screenings annually in the fall. Look for the announcement in a future Health Notes.

For more information about heart disease and how to detect, avoid and control it contact Judy at the Town Hall.

Trash system off to promising start

Committee wants to force private haulers to recycle

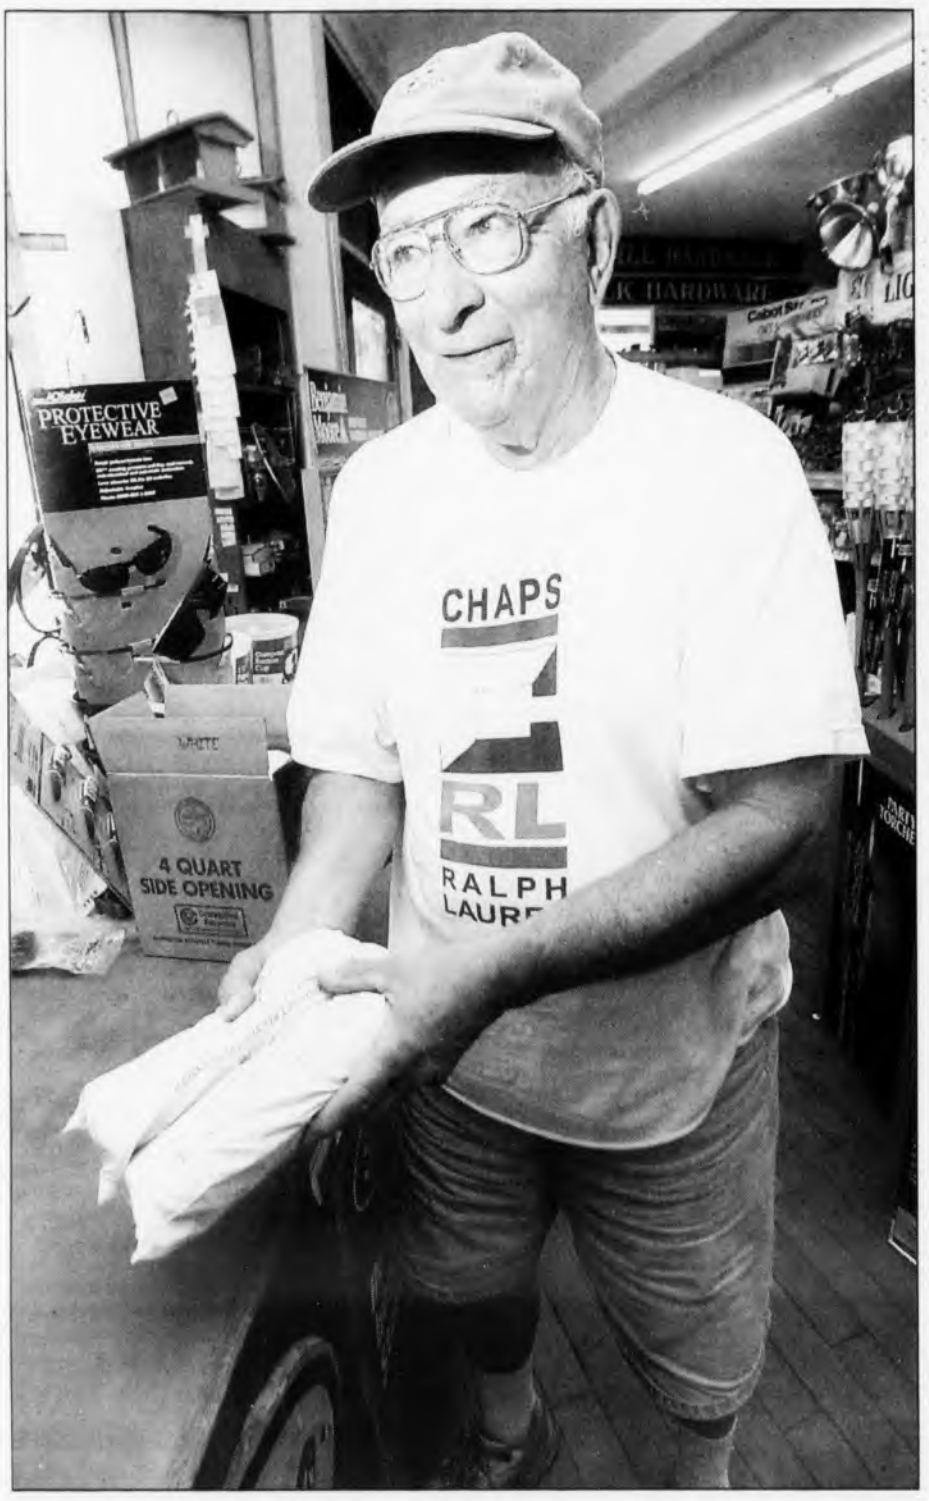
By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Arthur Lehr, chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee, is setting the standard.

"I haven't filled up one 15-gallon bag in a month," he says proudly. "But I've brought 10 bags full of recyclables to the RTF."

Although the average resident isn't recycling as much as Lehr is, initial figures for the month of July show a promising trend at the Recycling Transfer Facility off Cedar Street, dubbed the RTF.

And now that the recycling committee has the residents in line as far as recycling goes – the committee plans to ask the Board of Health to force commercial trash haulers to recycle. Almost 20 percent of the town's trash doesn't go through the RTF but is shipped out of town by private companies.



"It's going very well, people have adapted to it."
— Arthur Lehr, recycling committee

Cohasset trash tonnage sent to SEMASS, the incinerator in Rochester, Mass., is down. Pay-As-You-Throw — through which residents pay $1 for a 30-gallon trash bag or 50 cents for a 15-gallon bag — went into effect July 1. The program is intended to force residents to recycle more by making them pay for special, blue trash bags marked "Town of Cohasset." The philosophy behind the program if people recycle more, the less they will have to throw away.

"It's going very well, people have adapted to it," Lehr said.

Last month the town sent 116 tons to SEMASS which was less than half the average. July 2000 figures are not available, but the numbers for June and August 2000 were 260 and 279 tons, respectively. Average tonnage per month from January through June this year was 250 tons, recycling committee member Merle Brown said. The town pays about $100 a ton to dispose of trash, so when the total tonnage drops, the town saves money.

Brown said the July 2001 number might be artificially low because residents flocked to the RTF with all kinds of junk in June before the PAYT system took effect.

Dr. Bill Corriveau picks up two rolls of Pay-As-You-Throw bags at Cohasset Hardware in the village. Early numbers show residents are adapting to the new trash disposal system.

Residents are not charged to recycle although the town does have to pay to dispose of newspaper. Residents must attach a 50-cent bag to large items that are not able to be recycled and won't fit in one of the bags.

Early figures indicate that residents are buying most of their bags at the local hardware stores. So far, Joseph's Hardware on Route 3A has sold 23 boxes full of the big bags and eight of the smaller bags, Brown said. Cohasset Hardware in the village has sold 23 boxes of the big bags and 15 of the smaller bags. There are 20 packs of bags in a box. The bags are sold in rolls of ten and include wire tires and an informational insert about what is recyclable and what is not. Bags are also available at Cohasset Food Mart in Jonathan Livingston Seagull Square off Route 3A, Leo's Exxon Station at the corner of Beechwood Street and Route 3A and the DPW garage off Cedar Street.

State grants

The committee said the town won't qualify for state grants under the Massachusetts Waste Recycling Incentive program because the commercial trash haulers don't have to recycle. There is one exception, however, Joe Laugelle who has 55 customers and makes them recycle. Laugelle brings his customers' trash to the RTF while the other companies can't because they are not recycling. Including Laugelle, there are five commercial haulers in town.

The recycling committee said the Board of Health gives permission to commercial haulers to pick up waste in town and plans to address the issue with the board this fall. Grants under the state program could amount to $4 a ton for all recyclables the town generates, said John McNabb of the recycling committee. The town meets all the requirements, except having the private haulers recycle, he said.

"If they don't recycle, they should not get a license to operate in the town," Brown said.

POLICE BRIEFS

Police arrest two for drunken driving

Cohasset police arrested a Braintree resident and a Scituate resident this weekend for driving while drunk.

Peter J. McLaughlin, 42, of Chief Justice Cushing Highway, Scituate, was arrested and charged with operating under the influence of alcohol, and operating to endanger after colliding with a car on Route 3A Friday night.

Police say McLaughlin, who was driving a green GMC pick-up truck, hit Ralph Fraile, of Debary, Fla., as Fraile was attempting to make a left off Route 3A onto Lower King Street.

Officer William Quigley reported smelling a strong scent of alcohol from McLaughlin, as well as droopy eye lids, bloodshot eyes, and slurred speech. Quigley said McLaughlin originally denied having had anything to drink but later changed his story to "a couple."

Quigley said McLaughlin, who had graduated from high school and completed two years of college, refused to recite the alphabet because he "didn't know it," and also refused to take a numbers test. Quigley also said McLaughlin "had trouble standing up without supporting himself by hanging onto the bed of the pick-up truck."

McLaughlin pleaded not guilty in Quincy District Court on Monday. It was his second arrest for operating while under the influence.

David Williams, 27, of Liberty Street, Braintree was arrested early Saturday morning after driving Quigley off the road.

Shortly before 1 a.m. Saturday, Quigley said he was traveling northbound on Route 3A by Beechwood Street when he was faced with a landscaping truck driven by Williams, traveling southbound in the northbound lane. Quigley said he swerved off the road and then followed the truck with his siren on and lights flashing, but Williams did not pull over until the Booth Hill Road and Route 3A intersection in Scituate.

Quigley said he immediately saw an open 12-pack of Budweiser on the floor of the truck, and an open container on the passenger's seat and described Williams in his police report as "stupefied." Quigley said Williams told him he was swerving because he was tired. When asked if he knew where he was, Williams said, "Weymouth," and then later said he was "lost."

Quigley said Williams was unable to finish the alphabet, balance on one leg while counting, and walk in a straight line. Williams was arrested and charged with operating under the influence of alcohol, operating to endanger, operating a vehicle while drinking, and failure to stop for a police officer.

While at Cohasset police station, Quigley and Officer Garrett Hunt described Williams as "uncooperative." Hunt said after making six phone calls, he refused to sign any forms, including a personal recognizance form, and was placed back into his cell. He was bailed later that morning for $500.

He pleaded not guilty to all charges Monday at Quincy District Court. He is due back Oct 5., for a pre-trial hearing. It was also his second arrest for operating under the influence.

Boston man charged with leaving the scene, drugs

Cohasset police arrested a Dorchester man on a bevy of charges Saturday night, ranging from leaving the scene of an accident, giving a false name, and possession of a class B substance (crack cocaine).

Christopher Thornton, 20, was discovered by police behind the Cohasset Medical Building off Route 3A, after two cell phone callers reported being nearly sideswiped by a car in front of Stop & Shop.

Officer Geoffrey Treanor said Thornton was found driving a gray rental car in circles behind the medical building. He said the car had a blown right front tire, blown right rear tire, bumper and panel damage along the right side and damage to the left front tire.

According to Treanor's police report, Thornton, who gave the name Christopher Walden, smelled of alcohol, had slow speech and glassy eyes. When asked about the damage, Thornton said he was in an accident on the Scituate waterfront.

Treanor said Thornton was able to say the alphabet, albeit softly and slowly, but was unable to balance on one foot, and walk in a straight line. Upon searching the car, police discovered a pay stub made out to Thornton, who admitted giving a false name to the officers. Police also discovered a "white, rock-like substance" inside a plastic bag, inside the envelope.

After being read his Miranda rights, Thornton admitted to smoking crack earlier that night. He also registered a .13 on a breathalyzer test at the police station. The legal limit in Massachusetts is .08.

Police charged Thornton with operating under the influence of alcohol and drugs, reckless operation of a motor vehicle, giving a false name to a police officer, leaving the scene of an accident where there was property damage, driving without a license, and possession of a class B substance. Police estimated the crack to be worth $50.

Thornton was bailed at $450 and plead not guilty to all charges Monday at Quincy District Court. He is scheduled for a pre-trial conference on Oct. 3.

Scituate woman seriously hurt in Pond Street crash

A 23-year-old woman was seriously injured after crashing into a grove of trees at the Pond/Pleasant streets intersection last Wednesday, and police suspect mechanical problems contributed to the accident.

Jean E. Piers, of Chet Way in Scituate, was med-flighted to Brigham and Women's Hospital after losing control of her 1991 Ford van and striking a tree. Investigating officer Sgt. Robert Jackson said Piers, who was not wearing a seatbelt, suffered "serious visible injuries" following what appears to be an out-on-control ride down Pond Street.

According to a police report, witnesses saw Piers run through a red light with her horn blaring while traveling southbound on Route 3A. Piirs took a left onto Pond Street, and rode her brakes but kept accelerating down the sloped road.

"She left about 70 feet of skid marks," said Jackson.

Although the tree suffered only approximately $100 worth of damage, Piers' van sustained heavy damage to the front end.

Jackson said police aren't sure what caused Piers to lose control, but thought a stuck accelerator could be to blame.

A hospital spokesman listed Piers in "good" condition Tuesday.

At the Hingham house, police also found two license plates, checks taken during three Quincy break-ins, statuettes taken during a Hingham burglary, burglary tools, steroids, a hypodermic syringe, and a list of police scanner frequencies for a number of departments in the South Shore area posted on the refrigerator.

Hanover and Hingham police have charged Anthony Miele, with conspiracy to commit armed robbery while masked and multiple counts of receiving stolen property. His brother, Thomas, is charged with conspiracy, accessory after the fact and multiple counts of receiving stolen property. Bocchino, is charged with conspiracy to commit armed robbery while masked and multiple counts of receiving stolen property. Anthony Miele and Bocchino are being held without bail and face a dangerous person hearing. Thomas Miele is being held on $10,000 cash or surety bail. McCarthy, has been charged with conspiracy, accessory after the fact and multiple counts of receiving stolen property and is being held on $10,000 cash or surety bail. Police are looking into additional charges against the four men.

According to Hanover Police Lt. Walter Sweeney, the Rockland Trust Company in Hanover reported being robbed at 11:18 a.m. last Friday when a lone gunman, allegedly Bocchino, dressed in dark clothing and wearing a nylon mask, entered the bank and demanded money from the bank tellers.

Sweeney said Bocchino fled on foot and was later seen by a witness getting into a Maroon Lincoln Continental or Cadillac near the strip plaza's entrance. The car then reportedly fled the scene toward River Street in Norwell, in the direction of Hingham.

Hanover Police issued a general broadcast to neighboring departments about the robbery and motor vehicle involved.

According to Hingham police, McAdams discovered a vehicle matching the get-away car's description at the Rhodes Circle residence around noontime Friday while searching a number of Hingham neighborhoods. His curiosity was further aroused when he noticed the passenger-side lighted visor was down, keys in the ignition, no license plates, and a still-warm engine.

"It was a matter of being in the right place at the right time," said Carlson. "Officer McAdams exhibited the requisite amount of curiosity we want to see in all our officers and was able to put the pieces together."

McAdams was forced away to respond to an emergency call involving a car breakdown at Hingham Rotary, however, he notified the Hingham Police Department about his suspicions before answering the emergency call.

Back-up Hingham units were sent to the scene, where Officers Kris Phillips and David Jones and Sgt. Glenn Shaw assisted McAdams.

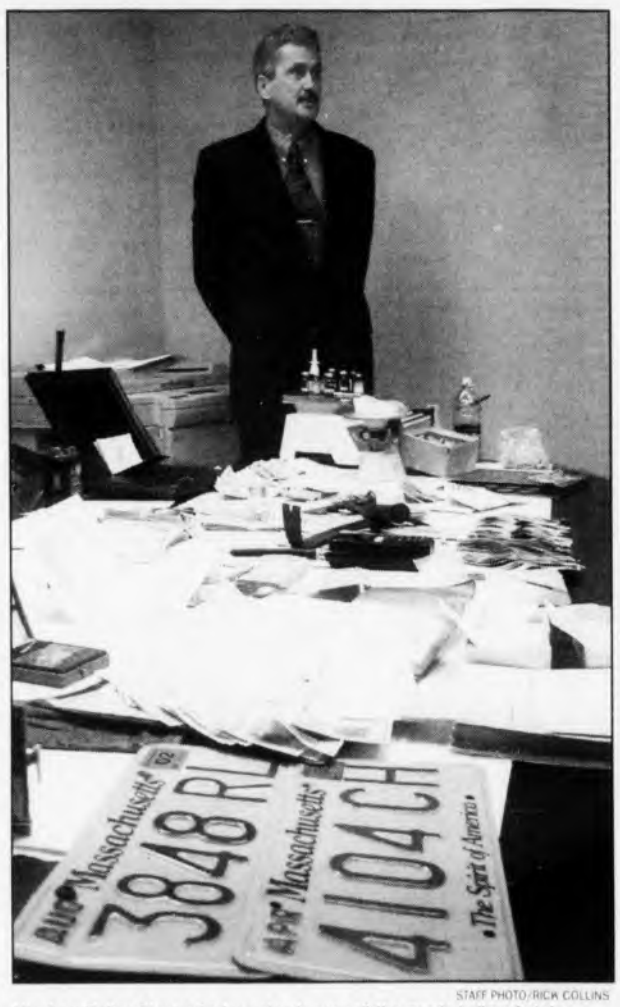
Hingham police placed the car and home under observation for 30 minutes and took the suspects into custody as they left the dwelling, one at a time, for receiving stolen property.

During the initial sweep of the house, McAdams and Shaw discovered large amounts of cash on a coffee table, gold jewelry on a bedroom floor and a crowbar.

"It looked like they had thrown clothing on top of the items to hide them," McAdams said.

Hingham police notified the Hanover Police Department, and Sweeney and Detective John Owens responded to the house. Upon receiving a search warrant of the suspect's car and house, police discovered a loaded .22 semi-automatic pistol, articles of clothing described by witnesses to the robbery and the nylon mask reportedly used by Bocchino. Police also recovered more than $20,000 in cash at the Rhodes Circle home, which is currently rented out to the suspects.

"Some of this money was still banded with Rockland Trust Company currency wrappers," said Sweeney.



Hingham police are still in the process of examining evidence gathered at the scene.

"We hope people will come forward to help us find the rightful owners," Carlson said.

Sweeney said much effort by police from Hanover and Hingham went into the arrest of the suspects.

"The identification of the suspects and subsequent arrests were based on some fantastic cooperation between both police departments. This is certainly a very important and satisfying investigation to be involved with in taking suspects off the street who have committed armed robbery," he said.

Group goes out on a limb to save ledges mon, village, harbor and Sandy Cove neighborhoods, all interested in preserving open space on Great Neck.

"The purpose of the group was to work toward preservation of the Great Neck area so that all citizens can enjoy this unique resource," said group member and Beach Street resident Mark DeGiacomo.

Bloomfield, a prolific author who usually focuses on international relations, is putting the final touches on the group's position paper, scheduled for town-wide distribution next month.

"We hope to educate Cohasset taxpayers and others of the situation in Great Neck as part of a larger issue," said Bloomfield.

The two-page handout describes in detail the general issue, its history, and proposed solutions. The group says it respects the right to private development, but "we also believe that to protect the character of Cohasset, now is the time to act for preservation of such core elements as ledge formations, points of geological and historical interest, and land abutting conservation areas."

The paper says the town Conservation Commission voted to acquire the land for open space in 1969, but the Town Meeting article was withdrawn after the land was sold.

The Cohasset Conservation Trust bought a majority of the land in the mid '70s, but the remaining parcels have remained in private hands. One house has been built on the ledge, but the group says the owner has agreed to restrict any additional development on the seven-acre plot, if the rest of the area is turned into conservation land.

The position paper contains a quote from a column written by Doane Street resident Jim Shipsky, which appeared in the Mariner, that says, "When we destroy granite ledge, we are truly eradicating the essence of Cohasset." The paper also touts the "connectivity" the area gives between the common, village, harbor and Sandy Cove.

The group proposes including natural resource protection measures in the new town master plan, currently being worked on by the Growth & Development Committee.

It also calls for town acquisition of the remaining acreage using money from the recently passed Community Preservation Act and any money received by the MBTA for the taking of the Greenbush right-of-way.

The town and MBTA agreed last week to a $1.6 million price-tag for the six-mile long right-of-way.

The Cohasset Conservation Trust has already committed $100,000 for the acquisition.

"This is a great opportunity to increase the size and scope of the existing Great Brewster Woods," said John Hartshorne, head of the trust.

Along with possible bylaw changes the paper calls on "all citizens to come to the fall Town Meeting and vote for this vital conservation effort."

Selectman Thomas Callahan, a former Conservation Commission chairman, said the issue of preservation has been a topic at the Growth & Development Committee's recent neighborhood forums.

"From the three forums we've had, we are certainly getting a sense from people around town that they appreciate the physical beauty of the town, and want to preserve it, and the ledge is a very big part of that physical attractiveness," he said. "We know people are concerned about ledge being chipped away in the village, which just plays into the sentiment of appreciation of the ledge that we are hearing."

A Town Meeting-approved sidewalk beneath St. Stephen's Church in the village would require the removal of up to four feet of ledge.

Although he wasn't aware of any town in the state with a ledge protection bylaw, he didn't see any reason why it couldn't be done, if town voters choose to do so. However he didn't believe in holding granite ledge "sacrosanct."

"For example, I support the sidewalk in the village," he said. "But I don't support trying to ram a driveway up the ledge on Beach Street."

Any contributions can be sent to the Cohasset Conservation Trust, Inc., P.O. Box 314, Cohasset, MA 02025.

New librarian arrives with references

Hingham and Cohasset along North and South Main streets took her right by the library where she would someday work.

And no one is more surprised than MacDermott, herself, about becoming a librarian — a calling she discovered in a serendipitous way.

Her family left the area and moved west, so MacDermott spent the rest of her childhood in California where she pursued a career in hairdressing.

"In high school, I was always doing everyone's hair, so I thought I might as well get paid for it," she recalls. Then with a smile, she adds, "It's a skill I'll have the rest of my life — and no one in my family has to go the hairdresser."

But a few years later, everything would change. Visiting a friend in graduate school at the University of California at Riverside, MacDermott walked over to the library school table where she picked up a brochure about library science.

"I thought, 'this is exactly what I want to do. I'll go to college next semester to become a librarian..'" she recalls. But her dream to attend a community college locally in California and eventually transfer to the University of California at Berkley had to turn eastward. Her mother moved the family back to Massachusetts where MacDermott later studied history at UMass Boston and obtained a master's degree in library science from Simmons College.

She worked at the South Boston branch of the Boston Public Library before her daughter was born. She loved the job but not the address [to work at the Boston Public Library, you have to be a resident of the city]. MacDermott is looking forward to the short walk to Sand Hills beach from her new home in Scituate, and the peace and quiet of small-town life.

While small in size, the Paul Pratt Library isn't all that different from the one in Boston — or the libraries in Plymouth and Peabody, where she also worked.

"It's the same in a way," MacDermott says. "The patrons are friendly and you get to know the corps group of people that come in all the time."

One difference between Boston and Cohasset, she points out, is the patrons here are "nicer about the fines," she says. "They'll admit when the book is overdue of if they've lost it."

MacDermott points out the new library — planned for the old Osgood School — will have a lot more space.

"My biggest challenge here is finding enough room on the shelves," she says.

Another challenge is to get more young people into the library. Younger children come in with their parents and to participate in special programs, but as children get older, they drift away from the library, she says.

The new library will have a young adult room, which should help.

"They [older kids] want to look in the computer for information, not books," MacDermott says. "Books are faster, trust me. Plus, you can verify where the information came from."

And as far as questions MacDermott's fielded at the reference desk over the years, there is one that has baffled her.

While at the South Boston branch of the BPL, MacDermott tried to help a young student find out who invented paper towels.

"Kids in South Boston had to write about an invention and find out all about it," she says. MacDermott said after researching as much as she could, she determined that paper towels must have been invented by one of the paper products companies, like Scott.

Then there are the "no-brainers."

"When I was in Plymouth, a man — who had a bar bet going that there were 51 states — called to ask if I'd look it up for him," she recalls with a laugh. "Of course, he lost the bet."

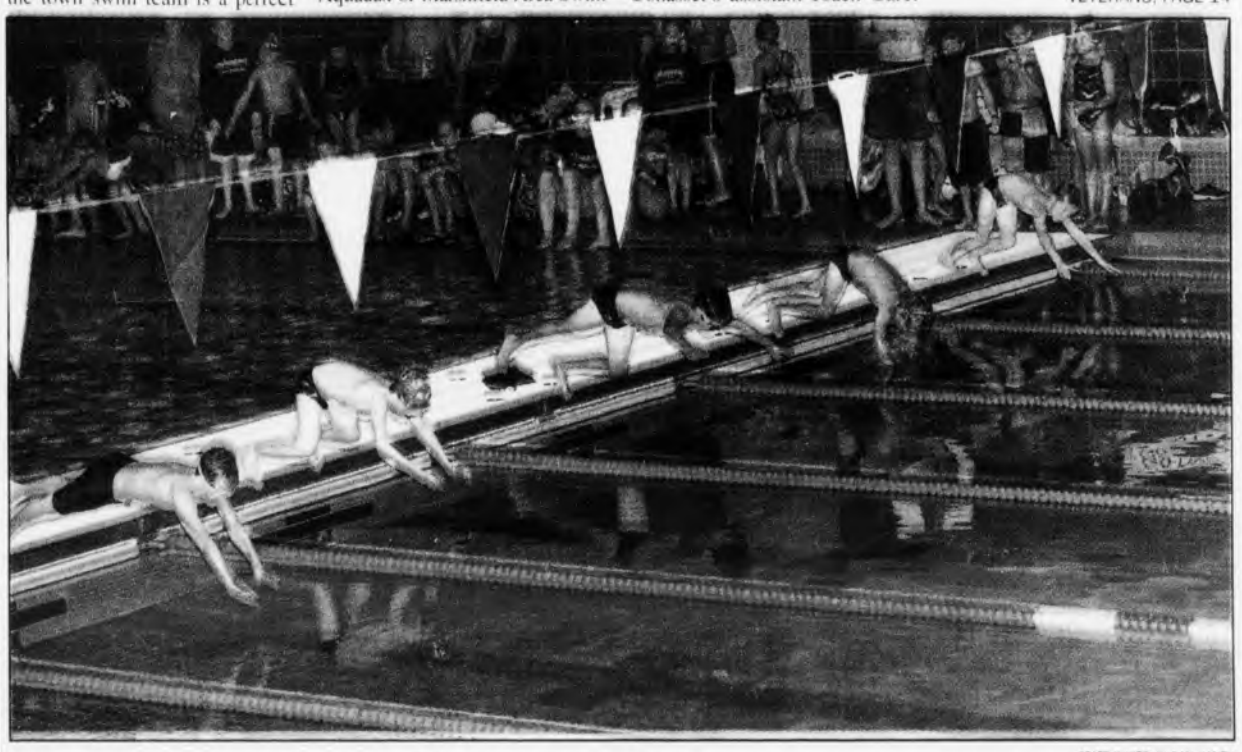
Veterans keep swim team afloat

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

For many teens, the summer is a time to forget about organized sports. Quite a few prefer to wait until the end of August to start up double sessions for their high school sport.

However, for a surprisingly high number of Cohasset young adults, the town swim team is a perfect mix between summer fun and team athletics.



Over the last two decades, Cohasset has become one of the top local summer swim clubs on the South Shore. Even though Cohasset is not a private club, like the Duxbury or Scituate Yacht Clubs, or year-round team like Duxbury Aquadux or Marshfield Area Swim Klub (MASK), they have won more South Shore Swim League championships than any other team, including these four.

Many people attribute the success to the startlingly high number of teenagers represented on the team.

"That was one thing I was really impressed with," said Cohasset's assistant coach Garet Jacobucci, a Scituate native who used to swim for MASK and the 2001 league champion Scituate Knights of Columbus.

A swimmer for the elite Gators Club, Jacobucci led a very strong girls 17-and under section this year, a section that swept every individual event last Saturday at

Knights nip MASK and Cohasset Swim teams at SSSL meet

The Knights of Columbus swim team won its first ever South Shore Swim League Championship, barely holding off the Marshfield Area Swim Klub team, 468-465.5. The Cohasset Swim Team, the lone team to beat K of C (6-1) in league meet competition this season, also kept things close to the end with 446 total points.

These three teams were easily the class of the eight team field at Saturday's SSSL Championships, held at Wheaton College in Norton. The Duxbury Yacht Club team finished a distant fourth with 282 points, followed by Aqua-Dux Swim Club (179.5), Eel River Beach Club (160), South Shore YMCA Sharks (144) and Scituate Harbor Yacht Club (103).

The swimmers arrived at Wheaton College to face seven other teams in the league. The cheering started at 7:45 a.m. and went nonstop until the finish of the meet after 1:00 p.m. Swimmers not competing in the meet came to cheer on their teammates. Excitement was high. Upon the announcement of the K of C victory all swimmers and coaches were in the pool celebrating.

The Cohasset Swim Team took a meet high 21 first places in the eight team championship meet, led by multi-event winners Garet Jacobucci (Women's 17 & under 50-yard freestyle, 50 butterfly and 50 backstroke), Kate O'Brien (Women's 17 & under 100-yard medley and 50-yard breaststroke), Caren Garber (Girls 12 & Under 50 Yard Freestyle and 25-yard butterfly) and Alexander Hunt (Boys 12 & Under 50 Yard Breaststroke and 50-yard backstroke). The team also took 17 second place finishes.

The Cohasset swim team enjoyed a perfect unbeaten season of 7-0, besting both the K of C and MASK teams in regular season meets.

PHYSICAL EXAMINATIONS

Prior to the start of the season, each student must have had a physical examination performed by a physician within the previous 365 days. A student is not eligible to participate if he or she has not had a physical examination within the previous year. Students who have the exam performed by their own family physician must provide a note signed by their physician clearing them to participate in sports.

ELIGIBILITY

All student athletes must adhere to the eligibility rules outlined in the CHS Athletic Department Student Behavior Code. At the start of each season, the student-athlete and a parent or guardian must sign the Student Behavior Code Agreement, which applies to all eligibility rules regarding academics, chemical health, attendance, age and all MIAA and South Shore League rules.

All players, coaches and parents are expected to represent Cohasset High School as good citizens who display good sportsmanship at all times.

USER FEES

The Cohasset School Committee has established a user fee of $75 for the first sport, $75 for the second sport, and $50 for the third sport, per athlete, for a total of $200 per year if a student participates in three different sports. These funds will be utilized to offset the reductions in the athletic budget.

In order for a student to participate in a sport, the entire user fee must be received on or before the first day of practice; no exceptions will be made. This fee, which is non-refundable (after the first game), does not guarantee that a student receive equal playing time during each game of his/her selected sport.

If this fee poses an unusual hardship for any student's family, the parent/guardian should call either the principal or athletic director so that arrangements can be made for the student(s) to participate. Payment should be by check, made payable to Cohasset High School.

INSURANCE

All members of interscholastic teams representing Cohasset High School are covered by special athletic insurance. This insurance is "non-duplicating"; it is intended to provide coverage for expenses in excess of any personal or family coverage, but within limitations of the policy.

For questions or concerns, call Ron Ford, Cohasset Middle/Senior High School athletic director, 781-383-6103 or e-mail: rford@chs.ssec.org.

Amputee golf tourney a hit in Marshfield

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

Things could have been a lot more hectic for a Kingston man than they turned out at the Marshfield Country Club last week.

Jim Kelly was in charge of publicity for the National Amputee Golf Championship held at MCC and had all he could do to keep up with the media and other little matters that needed attending. Besides, he also played in the scramble.

Had the National Amputee Golf Association got the man they were looking for to be the guest speaker at the event, Kelly's job would have been gargantuan.

The Association had sought golf great Jack Nicklaus as the guest speaker for the 53rd annual tournament. However, Jack was in Ireland last week for a previous commitment.

While Jack Nicklaus couldn't make the tourney, Geoff Nicholas of Australia did, and he won the tournament with a 210. In fact, Geoff has won all of the National Amputee Golf Championships since 1990.

"If we ever got Jack to come here, we would have really had a traffic jam at the club," said Kelly. "We gave it a good try, but Jack is a very busy man and much in demand."

Last week marked the third time Marshfield Country Club has hosted the event. The club was also the host in 1972 and 1997.

The tournament, which was started in 1949 had several local golfers competing among the 120 that made the cutoff. Included from the South Shore area were Fred Staples of Kingston, Mike Carey of Marshfield and Jim Kilroy of Hingham.

There's a good chance the tournament could return to Marshfield in five years.

"We like to move it around," said Kelly. "Obviously, players participate from just about everywhere you can imagine, and we like to give the different regions a chance to host the event.

"Marshfield, as usual has been very generous and likes hosting the tournament. We certainly would like to thank Bill Spears, the tournament chairman of MCC and Bob Mathews, the head groundskeeper at Marshfield Country Club for all the work they put into making this tour-

Nine year olds are still tearing it up

Cohasset All-Stars extend perfect streak to 28-0

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset's nine year old traveling baseball team simply cannot be stopped.

Dating back to last year, the District 8- Division A team has won an unprecedented 28 games in a row, including two league titles and a tournament win.

"I have been around sports a long time, and these kids are exceptional," said team manager Bob McCunney, a former college baseball player for Drexel.

Cohasset youngsters had no trouble bullying their way to a perfect 9-0 record in the regular season, consistently scoring in the double digits of their six inning games. More than a couple times, the team even had to invoke the Little League slaughter rule when beating a team by more than 10 runs after four innings of play.

What was even more impressive about their league crown was the competition. They were not playing smaller towns, nor were they playing similar sized towns. The Cohasset baseball team was beating up on the likes of Weymouth, Braintree, Whitman-Hanson and Stoughton—all with much larger Little League programs, to be sure.

With the number one seed going into the playoffs, Cohasset dispatched Weymouth 8-3, behind strong pitching from Brendan Doonan, Tom Buckley and Robby McCunney, and a three RBI day by John Kearney.

In the semi-finals, Cohasset trounced Canton, 12-3, as the usually potent Canton line-up was kept under raps by Doonan, Buckley and Jordan Berry, who also helped his own cause with a run-scoring triple. Cohasset was powered by multi-hit games from Justin Yeager and McCunney and sharp hitting from Chris Brown.

Cohasset was scheduled to meet Abington in the championship game on Wednesday.

This past weekend, Cohasset beat the extremely high-level competition in the baseball tournament in Raynham.

Cohasset took it to such local giants as Brockton (Brendan Doonan was named game MVP for his efforts), Boxboro and Bridgewater to advance to semi-finals with the number one seed.

They went on to better their hosts, Raynham, then overcame some heavy odds to edge out Bridgewater for the second time in a three day span, 6-5.

"That's no small feat," said Coach McCunney of taking down one of the best baseball towns in the State.

John Kearney and Robby McCunney earned Game MVP honors for their superb outings in the Semi-finals and Finals, respectively.

Bob McCunney mapped out what he thinks makes a team as successful as his has been.

"In general in baseball," he began, "I think the keys to winning are in this order: 1. Pitching. 2. Defense. 3. Baserunning. 4. Hitting."

But there is something else that has set this team apart.

"This particular team has been suc-

Jacobucci continues to set high water marks

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

It had been a few years since Garet Jacobucci swam competitively in the South Shore Swim League.

The soft-spoken teen would, of course, never even hint that she'd moved beyond that level of competition.

"I was just too busy with other swimming competitions," she offered modestly.

Not to imply that this is not a legitimate excuse. The recent Scituate High graduate has been a member of the nationally renowned Gators Club swim team since she was 12-years old, swimming year round against the best of the best both regionally and nationally.

Last week, Garet swam in what may well have been her final meet for the Gators— the Northeast Regional Junior Swim Championships in Buffalo (NY), where she advanced to the finals in the 50-meter freestyle.

Garet was also the one of the most dominant female swimmers on the Massachusetts high school scene this winter competing for the Cohasset-Scituate team, setting several league records and taking first place at the state championships in the 100-meter freestyle.

Her success on these stages earned her a very attractive offer from Emory University, a school that boasts one of the nation's premier swimming programs in addition to the highest GPA nationally for any swim team. Garet, who plans to major in Political Science, will be leaving for the Atlanta (GA.) school at the end of next week.

So, with that mission accomplished, Garet, like so many college students, figured she'd best use the summer to pick up a little pocket money. The offer to help coach the Cohasset Swim Team came along at the right time.

And the fact that she was not yet 18, and thus still eligible to compete in the 17-and-under division for the team, didn't exactly detract from the allure of the post.

"As jobs go, this was a pretty good match," said Garet, who competed years ago in the SSSL for the Scituate Knights of Columbus team and the Marshfield Area Swim Klub (MASK). "I had a lot of fun working with the younger swimmers, and getting to compete was a nice bonus."

Indeed, Garet didn't lose a race all summer, going 12-0 combined in the 50-yard freestyle, 50-yard breastroke, 50-yard butterfly and 50-yard backstroke to help lead the Cohasset team to a perfect 7-0 season. In the SSSL meet this past Saturday at Wheaton College in Norton, Garet posted three first places, including a league record setting time of 27.69 in the 50-yard butterfly.

Garet only took part in four of the team's regular season meets, including the leaguewide meet on Saturday that saw Cohasset finish third with 446 points, not far behind the first place Knights of Columbus (468 points) or second place MASK (465.5). She only competed in matches that head coach Allison Hughes figured would be closely contested, the regular season wins over the K of C and MASK teams being two of these.

Garet confessed that, up until this summer, she never envisioned herself as a coach. In fact, she admitted "I never saw myself having the patience for it."

So you can imagine her surprise when she "wound up loving it."

"Working with the younger kids was my favorite," she confided. "Seeing the way they improved as I worked with them was really great to see. I can't wait to do it again next year."

That's right, she'll be back at the Cohasset Swim Center next year, that is if she returns home for the summer—somethign that's probably a pretty safe bet.

"I'm really excited about going off to college, but I imagine I'll be home sick by the end of my freshman year," said Garet.

And there are worse ways to spend the summer than living at home and teaching swimming down the street, eh Garet?

Championships.

Also a major part of that squad was Hingham resident Kate O'Brien, a swimmer for Notre Dame Academy. O'Brien holds multiple league records, and swims for the Ocean Bay Squids in Rhode Island, the same year-round team as Olympic silver medalist Eric Vendt.

The 17-and-under mens' section was equally as impressive this year.

What they lacked in year round swimmers, they made up for in extremely large numbers.

In fact, while most opposing teams were hard-pressed to scrap together enough older men to put a relay team in the water, Cohasset often put two.

This year's championship relay—consisting of Scott Faber, Kayvon Tehranian, Bryan Bilton and this intrepid typist, finished second in the league, behind only Scituate Knights of Columbus. The K of C team featured two private school swimmers, a Gator, and an anchor who swam at Nationals timings.

Fifth year head coach Allison Hughes firmly believes that the presence of her older swimmers has a positive effect on the entire team.

"The younger kids look up to the older kids," she affirmed. "They way the 17-and unders work together: it really rubs off on them."

Year after year, coaches from all over the South Shore ask Cohasset officials how they manage to keep up the interest in the teenagers.

"Probably the reason is the fun and camaraderie that sustains itself from ages nine to 17," offered Bill Foley, a member of the Swim Team Committee. "It is also the success and history of the team that makes the older kids stay with it."

While it is true that swim team coaches are very lax about 17-and-unders missing practices, they know their swimmers will be there when needed.

"I know that the older guys have other commitments in the summer, so I am not terribly hard on them," said Hughes. "But come race-day, I know all of them are leaders."

"They always come through when we need them to," added Jacobucci.

Jacobucci is one of only two team members who will be missed next year, unable to participate due to age regulations. She will be heading to Emory next month, one of the top NCAA swimming programs in the nation.

"Just being a strong swimmer, she was nice to have," said Hughes.

The other 17 who will not be with the team next year is Jody Roach, who will enter his senior year at BC High in September.

"Jody was definitely a very enthusiastic team member," lauded Hughes. "In meets, he was a great influence on the younger kids."

This year, Cohasset finished third at championships. Though almost everyone on the team knew that the meet had been won by K of C, every last one of them stayed to applaud the champions while second place MASK had already cleared the building.

Another indication, arguably, that the leadership of the older kids really is rubbing off.

Falmouth Road Race has taken on a life of its own

THE EXTRA MILE

WITH JOE REARDON

You know a road race has taken on a life of its own when so many applications come pouring in, a lottery-type format is necessary to determine who comes away with a prized official number. With a starting field estimated in the mid-9,000s and another 2,000 unofficial runners packed behind the drawbridge in Woods Hole, the Falmouth Road Race has become just that.

Everybody who is anybody in the world's running community has run Falmouth. Just take a gander at a few of the names and you realize an opening mile of 4:50 won't put you anywhere near the lead pack. Bill Rodgers, Frank Shorter, Alberton Salazar, Steve Jones, Joan Samuelson, Arturo Barrios, Rob de Castella, Craig Virgin, Greg Meyer, Lynn Jennings and a plethora of supreme Kenyan runners have all traversed the 7.1 miles from Woods Hole, along Surf Drive and up and over the final hill to the finish line in Falmouth Heights.

The last time I ran Falmouth, Rodgers, in the middle of an amazing string of road race victories, pounded along Surf Drive with a then 20-year-old Salazar, before pulling away from the tenacious University of Oregon running machine and breaking his own course record in 32:21. I remember struggling along the just past the halfway mark on Surf Drive when a spectator, listening intently to the radio, announced that "Rodgers won!"

I had caught a glimpse of Rodgers warming up in Woods Hole at the start. I watched him for a moment, the way a young Red Sox fan would watch Manny Ramirez take batting practice. After seeing Rodgers crest Heartbreak Hill, en route to a 2:10:13 win for his second Boston Marathon victory that spring, he instantly replaced Carlton Fisk as my sports "hero." For a 13-year-old budding cross country runner, could there be better role model?

Twenty-three years later, I stood at the starting line, rather, 50 yards arrears. Rodgers, now in his early 50s, but no less the road warrior when he was running elite fields into the ground in the 1970s, was somewhere in the throng of runners ahead of me. So much had changed, yet so much was still the same.

I was filled with self doubt. My training hadn't been exactly what one would call "consistent." Had there been a seven-mile training run that I hadn't struggled through? I frantically went through my training runs over the past three months, trying desperately to come up with a workout I could clutch onto, where I felt absolutely fantastic. I quit trying to remember after a minute or two. The vault was empty. It was obvious to me that this Falmouth was going to be a grind from the gun.

What an understatement.

I was struggling well before the first mile at the Nobska Point Lighthouse. I don't remember my time (thank God for selective memory) but do recall that Springsteen's "Born To Run", which was blasting from a speaker, seemed too loud. The first red flag went up. As far as I'm concerned, you can't play Springsteen loud enough.

The course headed into the two mile stretch of rolling hills and winding roads. Sparse crowds cheered us on as we wound our way along the quaint, tree-lined route. There weren't a lot of spectators roadside, but they cheered for us enthusiastically. When you're feeling lousy, like I was, cheers of encouragement go a long way and are not soon forgotten. Runners streamed past me as I struggled along, already falling victim to the pangs of oxygen debt.

Finally, the course opened up again at three miles and the crowds along the side of the road grew thicker along Surf Drive. The final four miles of Falmouth are flat and fast. The lone exception is the last 600 yards as the course winds up to The Heights before plunging down to the finish line in front of the ballfield.

I told myself next year would be different. I'd be lighter and have a bounce in my step at the starting line. I'll be picking up the pace at three miles and weaving by runners the rest of the way. I'll chew up the final hill as if it didn't exist and be airborne across the finish line.

Of course, that's all easy to say now. I've got 12 months and 50 pounds to go before the 2002 Falmouth Road Race. The real mission will be landing an official number. Once that's accomplished, the rest will be pure gravy, or so I hope.

Nicholas' 210 was par for the course, shooting a 70 in each of the three days of the event.

The Australian golfer, who recently turned 40, lost a leg, below the knee when he was 13 as a result of a disease. He has developed into a solid golfer, participating in numerous tournaments throughout the world.

As for Kelly, he has participated in the national tournament once, in 1994. All he would say was that "It was a great experience."

He also competed last week in the scramble, the opening day of the event, which is held to familiarize the players with the course.

"We didn't do that well," said Kelly. "We turned in a one under, while the winning team came in at 12 under."

Kelly did note that the Association is looking for a sponsor. A big sponsor, like Nike, or Coke for example.

"We haven't had much luck, but we keep trying."

The motivation is something he really stressed, as the team attends two to three games a week, with two formal practices every week, and another optional practice which nearly the entire team comes to.

The practices have a strong focus on defense, led by centerfielder John Giuggio and fellow outfielders John Maher and Todd Emanuello. Eamon Davis and Andy McKenna serve as utility fielders playing infield and outfield, with Davis also impressing people with his stints on the mound.

McCunney also attributed his teams winning to the parental support and the coaching staff. The experience of Mike Kearney and Peter Buckley, both high school standouts in baseball, and Ralph Berry, a college star who went on to the Mets organization, added expertise and experience to the aid in the development of the young players.

There, both teams continued their winning ways, winning six matches each to capture the District tiles during the weekend tournament, which was completed on Aug 5.

Among the members of the Weymouth Club winning 4.0 team is Cohasset's Sara "Gigi" Meehan, the coach of the Cohasset High girls tennis team. The team, coached by Steve Flannigan of Weymouth, is also comprised of Capt. Archaeological excavation uncovers roundhouse

By David Wadsworth
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

In the spring of 2000, an archaeological "dig" was made at the Cohasset municipal parking area. The goal was to locate remaining below-ground structures once associated with the early railroad that ran through Cohasset, adjacent to the center village.

In 1849, a group of local investors built a new railroad line extending from Braintree to Cohasset. With its southern terminus at Cohasset village, the new line was called South Shore Railroad and it linked coastal towns with an earlier railroad leading to Boston. Here at Cohasset, the railroad station was located at the business center.

The railroad's maintenance and storage facility was located in the area now occupied by the municipal parking lot near today's junction of Ripley Road, Depot Court and Pleasant Street. Main structures associated with that early railroad facility, in addition to the nearby station and freight buildings, were a 45-foot diameter turntable, a "roundhouse" and a water tank used to refill the locomotives' steam engines. An early photograph in the Cohasset Historical Society archives clearly shows the four-bay roundhouse and an engine with its tender resting on the large turntable in front of the roundhouse. Today the roundhouse, turntable and water tank have disappeared, probably in the 1920s, but evidence of their presence shows clearly on old maps of Cohasset village.

Cohasset's Roundhouse circa 1910.

In 1997, the first research began to locate and record possible remaining below-ground parts of those three structures, as part of the environmental impact study being made for the M.B.T.A. relating to its Old Colony Railroad reconstruction plan. Preliminary research, then later the actual archaeological excavation at the parking lot site, was made by a professional firm from Pawtucket, R.I., the Public Archaeology Laboratory (PAL). Early atlas maps in society archives and more maps located elsewhere, as well as photographs, clearly show the location of those long-gone structures. Remaining to be learned, was the extent if any, of surviving below-ground foundations for water tank, turntable and roundhouse.

The estimated archaeological importance of the Cohasset Roundhouse site is great enough that it has been recommended for listing in the National Register of Historic Places.

The project in spring of 2000 consisted of carefully digging several trenches with a backhoe and by hand, each at the suspected location of part of the underground structure.

First, near the southeast end of the parking lot, not far from the teen center, it was hoped to find evidence relating to the old water tank. None was discovered but perhaps the trench was not quite correctly positioned. Seven trenches in all were dug. Near the northwest corner of the parking area at the Pleasant Street end, a trench uncovered a significant part of the underground base of the old turntable several feet underground. Part of the stonewall forming the sidewall of the structure was uncovered; as were various other cut stone blocks associated with the turntable.

A second trench, some 50 feet away located the opposite sidewall. A section of iron bar also found there may be part of a system of underground radiating arms designed to help stabilize the turntable mechanism. Near the northeast corner of the parking area, trenches located several important features of the old roundhouse, mostly in the form of parallel brick walls that once supported the rails upon which locomotives or cars would be kept, awaiting the return trip to Boston. Between the walls supporting rails there were inspection pits where railroad mechanics could view and work upon the running gear from below. The bottoms of the pits had a brick floor. The Cohasset roundhouse had four such bays.

Today the tops of the brick walls are located just below ground level, to the front of today's Colonial-style medical building on Parkingway. Inspection pits have been filled with cinders and other types of fill, the surface above them leveled, and the parking area black-topped in the 1960s. The trenches dug during PAL's project uncovered only a small part of the original foundation structure; without doubt the surviving walls and floors extend far outside of the area actually excavated. A few scattered small artifacts were uncovered at the site, including a medicine bottle and a rum bottle, not identifiable as railroad-related items; also some pottery fragments and part of an old type of clay smoking pipe, the kind frequently found among discarded household items.

PAL's preliminary report of its work at the parking area has been issued and it describes in detail both the progress and the findings that emerged during the course of this unique project. Cohasset's surviving railroad structures are located beneath an area critical to the center village — its parking facility. But this, in itself, could help preserve the underground brick walls and stonework. The estimated archaeological importance of the Cohasset Roundhouse site is great enough that it has been recommended for listing in the National Register of Historic Places. It is hoped the site will be marked by an appropriate sign indicating the importance of the archaeological features located there and the role they once played in the history of Cohasset.

IT'S HAPPENING

Olde fashioned picnic basket auction

The Cohasset Historical Society announces an "Olde Fashioned Picnic Basket Auction," fundraising event, Sept. 8 at 1 p.m. at the Lothrop House at 14 Summer St.

Bring a creative picnic lunch for two to be auctioned off to the highest bidder. Then join the festivities by successfully bidding on and enjoying the picnic lunch of your choice. Suggestions include:

• In addition to lunch, customize your basket with an enticing extra, such as gift certificates, lottery tickets, free lessons, specialty items. The more creative the basket, the bigger the donation to the historical society.

• Basket essentials: appetizers/soup, sandwiches, munchies (veggies, chips), salad (pasta, Caesar, fruit), dessert, disposable utensils, dishes, napkins.

• Attach a note to the outside of your basket. Specify your basket's menu items and any special features so that the auctioneer can "sell" its virtues to the audience.

• Bring a blanket or lawn chair.

• Beverages will be provided by the society.

Don't forget, this is a fund-raiser — the more attractive the basket, the higher the bidding will go.

For reservations and information, call Tam Elliott, 781-383-2169; Barbara Elliott, 781-383-1154; or Kathy O'Malley, 781-383-9765.

Maritime Museum open for summer

The Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum located at Elm St., Cohasset Center, is open for its summer season. Open times are Tuesday through Sunday, 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. There is no charge for admission, and donations are accepted. The museum itself is an old Ship Chandlery, or marine supply building, built in the 1700's by Samuel Bates and originally located at Cohasset Harbor. It is the sole remaining 18th century maritime-related building in near-original condition found in Cohasset today.

The Maritime Museum is devoted to preserving and presenting Cohasset's history as a seafaring community during the latter 1700's and the 1800's. During the "Age of Sail" the town's principal maritime occupations were fishing and shipbuilding and its maritime activity centered around its harbor, then known as "Ship Cove." Peak years for Cohasset's fishing industry were the mid-1800's, when family owned schooner fleets fished for mackerel in Canada's Gulf of St. Lawrence

The Maritime Museum preserves and presents that part of Cohasset's own history with ship models, carvings, dioramas, documents and pictures relating to the town's "Age of Sail".

Additionally the museum holds numerous unique exhibits on general historical subjects relating to Cohasset's early years. Currently the Museum's building is in process of being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places. The Historical Society's telephone is 781-383-1434

Extra special opening

Locals lined up for first showing of 'Osmosis Jones'

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

They were exuberant.

Swarms of children, adults and senior citizens waited patiently in the long line at the ticket counter, breathless with anticipation. They were not waiting for a concert, and they were not lining up to meet any sort of celebrity. They were waiting to get into the new Farrelly brothers film "Osmosis Jones."

The movie, which features both live action and clever animation, was shot in Plymouth last summer and opened at the Hoyts Cinema at Independence Mall Friday at 11 a.m. In addition to showing local color on screen, those behind "Osmosis Jones," have local ties. Duxbury natives Peter and Bobby Farrelly, known for their work on "Something About Mary," "Dumb and Dumber" and "Me, Myself and Irene," produced the new movie.

Many of those that crowded into the lobby of the Kingston theater Friday morning had a special reason for wanting to see the first showing of the Farrelly Brothers flick shot in neighboring Plymouth — they were in it. Others just recall running into the film's star Bill Murray who was on location in their Plymouth neighborhood for nearly a month last year.

"I live two streets over from where it was filmed," said Maureen Curtis, who was eager to see familiar places and faces on the big screen. "They were filming there for about three weeks."

"It was exciting," Curtis said of the filming. "Having Bill Murray hanging around on your street is pretty neat." She said Murray, the star of the new film alongside Molly Shannon, made himself available to sign autographs while shooting the movie.

Others in line were looking forward to seeing themselves on the big screen after landing small roles as extras in the movie.

Plymouth residents Caitlin Roy, her sister Stephanie, and their mother Judy were all lucky enough to be chosen for on-screen appearances.

"I had written a letter to the Farrellys when I heard they were filming the movie in Plymouth," Caitlin said. However, after she sent it, she was not sure the letter had made it there successfully so she wrote another one.

"They eventually invited me down to the set," Caitlin added. And that was that.

Caitlin's sister and mother soon made it into the film, too.

"It was neat speaking to the Farrellys and Bill Murray in between takes," she said. "I just thought it was all amazing. I couldn't even talk when I first got onto the set. I want to be a director so this was awesome for me."

Duxbury resident Alex Peterson also made it into the movie. Peterson has a part in the science fair scene and a classroom scene shot at the Nathanial Hawthorne School. Alex's, mom, Marilyn also made the casting cut.

"I played one of the moms at the science fair," Marilyn said. "I actually got to have lunch with Bill Murray. He's just a regular guy...very funny though."

Fellow Duxbury resident Colin Brumley also has a role in the science fair scene. While the whole experience was a thrill, Colin said one part of the scene in particular was his favorite.

"I like it when Bill Murray threw up all over Molly Shannon," he said, pointing out that it happened in the film, not in real life. Colin's mother Laura shares the scene with her son.

"I go running from the room in disgust after (Murray) throws up," she said. "The whole experience was quite thrilling, and the Farrellys were very nice people. Bill Murray spent his time between takes telling jokes and signing autographs for the kids, and getting pictures taken with them. Everyone on the set seemed to just be making the most of it."

Clutching a photo of herself and Bill Murray taken last summer when she played a part in the film, Brianna Cabral of Kingston was another eager moviegoer Friday.

"It was very exciting," she said. "I've never been in a movie before, and I'm really looking forward to seeing how it looks." While working on the film, Cabral said she even got the chance to challenge Bill Murray to a game of basketball. Although they never actually played the game, Cabral recalls Murray's response to her challenge — "Bring it on girl, bring it on."

"Osmosis Jones" is now showing at Hoyts Cinema at the Independence Mall in Kingston, Showcase Cinemas in Randolph and Quincy and the General Cinema in Braintree.

All that jazz

Metrosouth festival goes big time

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

In its fourth year, the time is right for the Metrosouth Jazz Festival to attempt a big leap forward.

The Brockton outdoor live-jazz showcase, which debuted in 1998, has been a somewhat low-key affair in its first three years. Presented from the beginning by the Brockton Mayor's Office of Cultural Affairs, the Metrosouth Fest was staged amid the county-fair atmosphere of tent venues set up on a section of the Brockton Fairgrounds, and featured mostly bills of talented, nationally and internationally heard but obscure jazz, ethnic and world music performers. From '98 to 2000, the event's best-known attraction was perhaps veteran Brockton-based saxophonist/bandleader Dick Johnson.

This year, the Metrosouth Fest moves to the full-fledged concert setting of Brockton's Marciano Stadium and headlines a bonafide world-class star performer in saxophonist/bandleader Branford Marsalis. The gala jazz event also features veteran combo the Yellowjackets, the noted vibraphonist/pianist team of Gary Burton and Makoto Ozone and singer/pianist Krisanthi Pappas, a Boston-based, award-winning jazz woman who was also born and raised in Brockton. This breakthrough edition of the fest hits the stage on Saturday evening, Aug. 18 and the Stadium gates open at 5 p.m.

One major reason for the fest's stepping up in stature this year was the Mayor's Office enlisting the experienced booking and promotional help of Brockton entertainment attorney Paul Carchidi. Carchidi is an established area lawyer and music-biz professional who spent most of the late 1970s and 80s as manager of the locally successful Boston club rocking band the Lines, and since 1992 has produced the locally syndicated alterna-rock video/club-scene TV program Rage!, hosted by on-camera emcee and ex-Lines singer/guitarist Eric Hafner.

"We're very excited about this year's Metrosouth Fest," said Carchidi, speaking of his latest venture into both the jazz realm and concert promotion.

"The performing lineup we've booked and the stadium venue really puts the Festival on the map, we think, and could be the first major step toward this event becoming internationally known.

"The performing lineup we've booked and the stadium venue really puts the Festival on the map, we think, and could be the first major step toward this event becoming internationally known."
Brockton entertainment attorney Paul Carchidi

We started planning the event as far back as last September, and from the beginning, we've had our sights set on getting internationally known, name-recognition performers on the bill. It's very difficult, of course, to get the big-name performers of this level given the reality of the major corporate firms controlling the concert business. But we managed to outbid for Branford Marsalis against the Hartford Jazz Festival taking place on the same weekend."

Carchidi said he had also put first bids on Tony Bennett and Ray Charles to headline the Fest, but found Charles was booked at the Newport Jazz Festival and Bennett was scheduled to play with K.D. Lang at the BankBoston Pavillion and the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset..

"Then we finally found out Branford was available and landed him," Carchidi said.

The attorney/music fan explained that concert business contracts require that no dates by the same performer can be booked within 100 miles and 30 days on either side of each other. He also mentioned that he and the Mayor's Office promotion had also put early bids on booking fast-rising jazz chanteuse/pianist Diana Krall as well.

Marsalis may still be best known as Jay Leno's ex-bandleader on the Tonight Show, or as Sting's sax-playing sidekick in the rockumentary film Bring On the Night, but he's also enjoyed a stellar, award-winning career as an updated old-school jazz bandleader emulating the classic playing styles of John Coltrane among others. The Yellowjackets are a Los Angeles quartet originally formed noted jazz guitar ace Robben Ford in 1977, and have since gone on to an acclaimed career as an experimental jazz group including mainstay members Bob Mintzer (saxophone), Russell Ferrante (keyboards) and Jimmy Haslip (bass).

Burton is known as modern jazz's premier vibraphonist, and as vice-president of Boston's Berklee College of Music, and has frequently toured and recorded with his piano-playing mate for this occasion, Ozone. Pappas is a regular performer at Boston Sculler's and Regattabar jazz clubs as well as Foxwoods Resort and Casino and many other jazz concerts and festivals and has a critically praised recent CD, titled My Back Yard, containing jazzy arrangements of classic songs she grew up with as well as originals.

"We want to turn the Festival stadium into something on the level of the Tweeter Center. The stage for this show will look very professional, with lighting and sound by the same company that they use at the Tweeter Center," Carchidi said.

The Metrosouth Fest is expected to sell out and tickets, available through Ticketmaster, are limited. For more information, call (508) 580-7109

Wednesdays will rock at Vincent's

Randolph night club goes retro this fall

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

It might have been a preview of things to come when Randolph's Lombardo's/Vincent's complex hosted a sold-out presentation of Beatlemania last winter.

That show was in the Lombardo's ballroom venue of the multi-level nightclub/function facility. Moving next door to the Vincent's club wing, a newly hatched concert series slated for this fall looks to continue what the Beatlemania date started, to probe the retro-rock/pop concert market in the local area with performances by survivors of the 1960s and 70s music scenes, in the forms of both original and tribute acts alike. The series should also effectively fill a glaring Wednesday night void in Vincent's weekly entertainment schedule.

"Wednesdays Rock!" at Vincent's, as the series has been dubbed, has booked nine weekly shows for mid-September through November. The concert showcase, produced by Tiffanie Williams & Co., a Quincy public relations, advertising and event planning firm, invites 60s/70s rock/pop music fans from the South Shore and elsewhere to engage in sweet, or bittersweet, nostalgia with sounds from some of the era's most fondly remembered acts, and also to, as the series tagline beckons, "(K)ick your weekends off early!"

"I worked on promotion for Beatlemania at Lombardo's last February, and Beatlemania worked very well," said series booking and promotion coordinator Steve White of Tiffanie Williams & Co. "I'd known that Vincent's was successful with its Thursday-through-Sunday-night lineup including the Dance Party plus the Latin, Discotheque and Caribbean nights and the club packed with customers and live DJs. And I saw a great opportunity for putting live bands in on Wednesday nights. When I approached the Vincent's management to propose the idea for the concert series I dealt from the strength of classic rock, that it has a very strong demographic in people from the mid 20s to the late 40s, and also that there's not a lot of live music around in the fall."

The retro-concert fun kicks off Sept. 19, when Vincent's hosts Jefferson Starship, featuring original Airplane/Starship members Marty Balin and Paul Kantner ("Somebody To Love," "White Rabbit," "Miracles"). Following up the next week (Sept. 26) is ABBA Again, billed as the country's premier tribute act to the mega-selling Swedish 1970s pop phenomenon ("Dancing Queen," "Mamma Mia," "Fernando"), and second in the world only to the highly successful British ABBA homage group Bjorn Again.

The series continues into October with early 70s rockers Badfinger, featuring original member Joey Molland ("No Matter What," "Day After Day," "Come and Get It"). The spotlight heads south the next week (Oct.10) with Southern Rock Rebellion, featuring veteran Dixie rockers Charlie Hargrett, a founding member of Blackfoot, Buzzy Meekins of the Outlaws ("Green Grass and High Tides"), Steve Wheeler of Molly Hatchet ("Flirtin' With Disaster") and Shawn Beamer of the Stephen Stills Band ("Love the One You're With"). A 60s rockin' oldies night follows Oct. 17 with a double-bill of ex-Paul Revere & the Raiders lead singer Mark Lindsay ("Kicks," "Hungry") and Mitch Ryder ("Devil With a Blue Dress On," "Sock It To Me Baby"). Retro-glam rock is on the bill the following week (Oct. 24) with the Edgar Winter Band ("Free Ride," "Frankenstein").

In November, guitarist Jay Geils and harpist/vocalist Magic Dick mix classic J. Geils Band rock and contemporary blues with their current band Bluestime (Nov. 7). The next week (Nov. 14), the sounds turn to symphonic rock with Orchestra, featuring former members of the Electric Light Orchestra and the recently reformed ELO - Part II ("Turn To Stone," "Livin' Thing," "Roll Over Beethoven"). On Nov. 28, the fall series concludes with a show by the critically hailed Doors tribute act the Soft Parade.

"I think we have a great lineup of shows for this series, even though the Orchestra band coming in November will be without ELO mainman Jeff Lynne, who's out touring arenas with no members of the old band and has the rights to the actual ELO name," White said. "But everyone we have playing, including Orchestra, are strong concert draws in their own right, and in the case of both Mark Lindsay and Mitch Ryder, they've always been popular attractions on the road. Even back in the day Lindsay with the Raiders were one of the few American bands that didn't get killed by the British Invasion.

Altogether, the concert series is something unique for the fall on Wednesdays, for fans of true live music with no drum machines and no pre-tapes."

White also notes the series' co-sponsorship for selected shows from three Boston radio stations, Classic Rock WZLX, Rockin' Hits of the 60s and 70s WROR, and Oldies Radio WODS, all of whom will make in-house appearances at the shows with promos and ticket giveaways. Tickets for all shows are currently available online at www.ticketweb.com, by phone at 866 468-7619, or in person at all Strawberries Music & Video Stores.

Blasts from the past! Mitch Ryder, the tribute band ABBA Again, and Orchestra — featuring members of ELO will all perform during the Wednesday night concert series at Vincent's this fall.

Summer bread salad

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Ripe, flavorful tomatoes tossed with chunks of bread and olive oil are just about all you need to make a great summer bread salad. Yet the simplicity of this summer dish belies all that can go wrong. If you follow an authentic Italian recipe, you might be tempted to soak the bread in milk, squeeze it, and then mash it with a fork. With the sort of bread available in this country, however, the result would be pastry, tasteless clumps of sodden dough. So, for starters, I focused on the choice of bread and how to ready it for the salad.

I purchased rustic loaves of white bread and, to solve the texture problem, toasted 3/4-inch cubes in a 350 degree oven for 20 minutes or until golden brown on the outside. The cubes were thrown into the salad and held up well. The bread was at once soft and crunchy and instead of having a pasty flavor it actually absorbed plenty of dressing making the chunks delicious. I found the loaves with the most chew and coarsest texture to work best-they hold up the longest in the salad without falling apart.

Having ripe, deeply flavored tomatoes is the single most important part of this recipe. (Forget about this recipe unless you are sure of your tomatoes.) With the bread cut into chunks I found the salad easier to eat if the tomatoes are also cut into chunks. (Wedges were too big). To gain the maximum amount of juice from the tomatoes, I found that salting them and letting them sit for 15 minutes was the best method. This liquid then soaks into the bread, adding flavor. A pound and a half of tomatoes - about 4 cups chopped - is enough to serve 4 to 6 as a salad or side dish when paired with 4 cups of bread cubes.

As for the other ingredients, vinegar was the first stop. Red wine vinegar was my favorite followed by balsamic which was a bit too rich for such a light dish. Three tablespoons of extra virgin olive oil was just right and I discovered that the oil and vinegar should be added to the tomato juice before tossing in the bread chunks. (Once the bread is in the salad it is difficult to evenly distribute liquid ingredients.)

My herb of choice was definitely basil and 1/4 cup thinly sliced leaves worked well. One quarter cup thinly sliced red onion or shallot was a nice addition but optional. I also tried olives, capers, anchovy, and tuna but found no improvement. The salad did taste great served on a bed of arrugula, however. The conclusion? This is a simple summer dish which is best kept quick and simple.

SUMMER TOMATO/ BREAD SALAD

This salad should be assembled shortly before serving and can sit for about 40 minutes or so before the bread starts to lose its texture.

4 or 5 slices of chewy rustic white bread cut into 3/4-inch cubes, about 4 cups

1 1/2 pounds vine-ripened tomatoes

1/2 teaspoon salt

1 1/2 tablespoons red wine vinegar

3 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil

1/4 cup very thinly sliced shallot or red onion

1/4 cup thinly sliced basil leaves (you may substitute parsley, oregano, tarragon, chives or the herb or combination of your choice)

Freshly ground pepper to taste

1. Heat the oven to 350 degrees and set a rack to the center position. Place the bread in one layer on a baking sheet and toast for 18 to 20 minutes or until the exterior is a rich golden brown and the bread is crunchy but not rock hard. Meanwhile, halve, core and cut the tomatoes into bite-sized chunks and place in a large bowl (you should end up with about 4 cups). Toss with the salt and let rest until a pool of liquid accumulates, about 15 minutes. (This step may be prepared up to 1 hour ahead of time.)

2. Add the vinegar, oil, and optional onion and toss to combine. Add the bread and basil and toss to combine. Let sit for 5 minutes, toss again, add a few grindings of pepper and serve at once. You may drizzle additional olive oil over individual servings if desired.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

THURSDAY, AUGUST 16

If you plan to start major projects today, you must get them off the ground before 9:03 a.m., when the moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive. No major planetary activity occurs after that. The remainder of this day is prime for cleaning out the clutter, reorganizing, tying up loose ends. Take quiet time out for yourself this evening, meditate for inner peace.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 17

The final windup to this month's new moon begins at 5:25 a.m., when the moon enters Leo. Plan to finish projects already begun rather than starting new ones. An applying alignment of Mercury and Jupiter generates an optimistic mood. Be sure to take extra time out for fun and games; forget your troubles and go for the good times.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 18

This is a day that can go either way. The dark side of a new moon is in full force and effect. Don't get caught up in minor hassles, worries. Maintain a sense of humor, look on the bright side of things. The new moon culminates at 10:55 p.m., and the moon becomes inactive. Relax, unwind, recharge your batteries.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 19

At 4:53 a.m. the moon enters Virgo, placing the emphasis on healthy eating and natural living. Get back on track with physical fitness, exercise regimens. Lunar alignments to Jupiter and Mercury this evening highlight all communications, study, mental activities. If you have work projects to accomplish, you can be most productive.

MONDAY, AUGUST 20

Gear up for a hectic week. A positive attitude is your ace in the hole. Don't allow minor obstacles or negative people to throw you off course. Today the moon continues to travel in Virgo, active until 4:21 p.m. Plan a busy schedule. Focus on jobs you've been putting off. You can get them out of the way today. Mercury, the planetary ruler of Virgo, forms stressful alignments to Pluto today and Saturn tomorrow. Signing contracts or making important decisions are off limits.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 21

The moon enters Libra at 4:19 a.m. The best way to handle today's planetary influences is to take on a full work agenda. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury to Saturn urges you to keep an open mind. Don't create problems for yourself by worrying about situations that are out of your control. Instead, zero in on matters you can do something about. Hard work will pay off. This influence is favorable for developing projects that need mental concentration and attention to detail.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 22

This is a great day for vacationing. The Libra moon interacts with Mars and Uranus in the afternoon, and Mars prepares to align with Uranus tomorrow. Give others lots of freedom and space. Change your routine; explore new horizons and develop new alliances. At 9:27 p.m. the sun moves into the sign Virgo, remaining there until September 22. The moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive at 9:34 p.m.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 23

Planetary action makes for an intense day. Be sure to start off with an upbeat attitude. The moon enters Scorpio at 5:50 a.m. At 12:06 p.m., Pluto, the planetary ruler of Scorpio, begins direct travel at 12 1/2-degrees of Sagittarius. This is a potent combination. You may feel forced to deal with issues that just won't go away and make tough choices. Eliminate negativity in your life; let go of past hurts and resentments. Open your heart to higher visions. Because Pluto is a slow-moving planet, its influence has affected the last few days and will continue to linger.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 24

Yesterday's advice pertains to today as well. The moon continues its travel in Pluto-ruled Scorpio. You may have to face the facts about situations that have been troubling you. This is a great day for tackling projects that need mental concentration, study, research. You can cut through obstacles and get to the bottom of things. Take quiet time out for yourself. Important insights and inspirations may come, if you have quiet space and time to listen.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 25

Wake up in a good mood. The Scorpio moon aligns with Venus at 7:16 a.m. and becomes inactive. Influences turn around completely at 10:59 a.m., when the moon enters ebullient Sagittarius. The remainder of the day rates high for enjoying favorite friends and pastimes. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 3:55 p.m. A full moon is building and will culminate September 2. A lunar alignment to Neptune this evening prompts you to forget your troubles and let the good times roll.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 26

The moon continues to travel in upbeat Sagittarius. However, it forms challenging contacts to Pluto and Saturn that are in effect between 9:24 a.m.-2:21 p.m. This can be a very emotional period, when deep feelings or hidden resentments surface. On the other hand, this interval is ideal for spending time alone. Look within for answers, and you'll find what you need to get back on track. By mid-afternoon the optimistic side of a Sagittarius moon returns, making the remainder of the day prime for socializing, enjoying favorite leisure activities.

Use variegated foliages for season-long accents

Green thumbs up

Part 3

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Monsoonal moisture and cool temperatures have brought welcome relief to our heat-stressed gardens and landscapes following several days of scorching temperatures. Despite a temporary return to more comfortable weather, by mid-August, even the most passionate gardeners have often lost their urge to plant, weed and cultivate. We may leisurely remove spent flowers, pull a few weeds and harvest the bounty of our vegetable gardens, but many a well-tended perennial garden suffers a little neglect during the latter half of the month as we recuperate from several months of hard work, take summer vacations and sit back and admire our efforts.

The summer dog days are an ideal time to document our successes and failures in this year's gardens, make note of changes which need to be made, and create a photographic record of our landscapes to study during the winter months. August is a prime time for observing butterflies flutter about our gardens as they sip nectar from butterfly bushes, stokesia, coneflowers, coreopsis and phlox. It is a time to delight in watching hummingbirds investigate everything tinted red, pink or orange in the garden, as they pause to partake of the sugary rewards found in fuchsia, cardinal flower, bee balm, butterfly bush, honeysuckle, trumpet vine and salvias. This is the month to relax and enjoy our gardens; the fall planting and transplanting season will soon be upon us.

When heat and humidity return, I will seek refuge in my shady borders where the lush green foliage and cooler temperatures offer relief both visually and physically. The presence of variegated foliage is particularly appealing, perhaps because the green leaves, splashed with white, create the illusion of frost, snow or ice. Their varied patterns brighten any dimly lit corner and provide a welcome contrast to an all green palette. In recent years, new plants have become available with nearly every conceivable combination of variegation possible. The value of these plants in either the sunny or shady garden cannot be understated.

Few plant families rival the ease of culture and diversity currently available from hosta. Improved varieties of the popular green and white forms include a series of the patriotically designated cultivars, "Minuteman", "Loyalist" and "Patriot". Additional variegated hostas are too numerous to list but a few particularly handsome varieties include "Brim Cup", "Robert Frost", "Antioch" and "Wide Brim". For the front of the border or smaller gardens, look for "Carrie Ann" or "Louisa", both of which boast lovely, pure white flowers, or my personal favorite, a new little one called "Pandora's Box". Several sensational, variegated, blue-tinted hostas contribute a lovely contrast to the predominance of green in the shady border including "Great Expectations", "Northern Exposure", and "Regal Splendor". Green and gold hostas offer an alternative variegated theme to the mixed foliage border with numerous representatives such as "Shade Fanfare", "Just So", "September Sun", "On Stage", "Gold Standard", or the unique, twisted leaves of "Medusa".

For a striking plant to combine with hostas and ferns, be on the lookout for variegated Siberian bugloss, Brunnera macrophylla "Variegata". In spring, small, green, heart-shaped leaves, boldly edged in creamy-white, are topped with sprays of tiny, bright, sky-blue flowers. As the season progresses, the leaves become larger and more dramatic, providing a stunning clump of handsome foliage. Cultivars include "Hadspen Cream" and "Dawson's White". Other notable introductions include Brunnera "Langtrees", which displays large silver markings on a green background, and an exciting new introduction, "Jack Frost" which boasts silver-frosted foliage with green veins. I have planted this latter treasured gift from a special gardening friend alongside a large gold-leafed hosta and eagerly await its reaching a mature clump. These plants prefer a humus-rich, moisture-retentive soil.

While the majority of ornamental grasses seem to prefer sunny locales, there are a few choice selections which thrive in the shady border. The queen of these grasses is the Japanese Hakonechloa macra "Aureola", its arching, 18-inch, yellow and green-striped foliage offering a marvelous contrast of form and texture to the broad leaves of hosta. An established clump never fails to elicit positive comments from garden visitors. The members of the Carex family, grass-like in appearance but theoretically sedges, are especially valuable plants in that many of them are variegated and semi-evergreen, thereby providing a source of winter interest. Carex "Ice Dance" is a stoloniferous plant which is an excellent semi-evergreen ground cover and C. morrowii variegata is a reliable, evergreen clump, gradually expanding each season to form a handsome mound.

Shade-loving groundcovers have numerous variegated representatives. There are gold and white-edged pachysandra and vinca which provide a reliable evergreen cover once established and the silver, green and white leaves of Lamium "White Nancy", "Pink Pewter" and "Pink Pearl" remain green well into the winter months. Several new introductions including Lamium, "Ann Greenaway" and L. "Golden Anniversary" exhibit serrated leaves splashed with gold, silver and white. The variety "Beedharm's White" glows across the garden with fabulous gold foliage and complimentary white flowers. Add a few of these colorful foliage plants to your shady borders for a long season of interest.

Local businessman and property owner, Peter Roy, has a plan for Cohasset's "Motif #1", the building at left, that is in danger of falling into the Gulf River.

Planning board likes initial proposal for harbor boatyard

Project would add four condo units

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Planning Board voiced its support last week for local businessman Peter Roy's initial plans to renovate the Mill River Marine Railway site on Border Street.

"We looked at the plan informally and thought it looked pretty good," Planning Board Chairman Al Moore said this week. "It would look nice and ensure that that part of town doesn't turn to rubble."

The meeting between the board and Roy attorney Charles Humphreys was described as an "informal review" of the plan before Roy begins the permitting process with local boards. Roy has not yet officially submitted any plans, and no official action was taken at last week's meeting.

The Mill River Marine Railway site is one of the most visually familiar, if not run-down, areas in town, housing the Lobster Pound, a boat repair yard operated for the past 31-years by Frank Carey, and Cohasset's "Motif No. 1," the storage building used in the 1987 movie "The Witches of Eastwick."

Roy's multi-million dollar plan would tear down all the structures on the site, except for the Lobster Pound, and the "Eastwick" building, and replace them with a new main three-story boat repair shop, a kayak sales and rental shop and an expanded deck area. Also, the project would renovate the dilapidated Eastwick building, add a public launch for canoes and kayaks into the mouth of the Gulf River, and improve the existing railway system.

"We really don't have any other plan, other than take it down or let it fall down.

— Linda Shropshire, spokesman for Peter Roy

The main change to the site would be the addition of four condo units above the boar repair building and Eastwick building, which Roy contends is essential to financially fuel the project.

"If this doesn't go through, the site's in real serious trouble," Roy spokesman Linda Shropshire said this week. "We really don't have any other plan, other than take it down or let it fall down. Nothing else will work in from our perspective."

Moore echoed Shropshire's contention.

"It's probably going to fall down in a few years if nothing is done. It would be great if we could freeze time and save the charming motif, but that's wishful thinking," he said. "The clapboards are the only thing holding it up — the internal supports are gone. It's probably take one good hurricane or Nor'Easter and it's gone."

He agreed that allowing condos as part of the plan is a "necessary trade-off" to ensure the long-term viability of the site.

"And my guess is that if the project went through with four condos, they'd sell in a hot minute," said Moore.

Shropshire said Roy, who also owns Kimball's By the Sea, the Atlantica and Olde Salt House, is fully committed to keeping the Lobster Pound and boar repair

Not all are aboard on Greenbush decision

MBTA to go ahead; AfTA heads to court

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

After 17 years of planning, hundreds of meetings, and thousands of pages of documents, restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line could come down to a battle between former and current state officials.

This week, state Environmental Affairs Secretary Robert Durand deemed the Greenbush final environmental impact report "adequate," alleviating the final, major environmental hurdle for restoring the third of the Old Colony commuter rail line through Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate. However, John Bewick, a former state environmental affairs secretary under Gov. Ed King, called Durand's approval "outrageous," and not only vowed to sue over the decision, but said he can't wait for his day in court.

"I'd rather be on my side of the case than on theirs by far," said Bewick, head of Advocates for Transportation Alternatives (AfTA), an anti-train group. "I look forward to the opportunity to cross-examine the MBTA in court."

The report is supposed to identify the environmental impacts a project will have, and the proposed actions that would either avoid, minimize or mitigate those impacts, in compliance with environmental standards and regulations under the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act.

By issuing the certificate of adequacy, Durand said the MBTA has complied with state environmental laws. While giving the project a green light, Durand also threw out a life line to concerned environmentalists. He ordered the MBTA to implement a pilot program that would study the effectiveness of new technologies in reducing air pollution from diesel engine emissions.

"Opportunities may exist...to accelerate emissions reductions through the use of after-engine emissions controls, and/or fuel approaches," Durand said, specifically pointing out particulate filters and use of low-sulfur fuels.

"I look forward to the opportunity to cross-examine the MBTA in court."

—John Bewick, president of AfTA

He also required a technical working group made up of representatives from state and federal agencies to study whether a shallow-cut tunnel would be feasible beneath Weymouth Landing, and recommended that the Greenbush locomotive layover site be moved off the banks of the North River to north of the Driftway, the connector road between Route 3A and Scituate Harbor.

Durand acknowledged the "long and contentious" process, saying his office has received thousands of comments during the environmental review period. But he backed the MBTA's contention that construction of the 17-mile rail line is the best alternative when it comes to increasing commuter access to Boston. (This is the MBTA's final phase in restoring commuter rail service; the

Deer Hill, Osgood times have changed

Should keep buses on schedule

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Imagine you are waiting at work for the clock to strike 5 p.m., and then you find yourself forced to stay in your office for up to a half an hour later just because your ride home hasn't arrived.

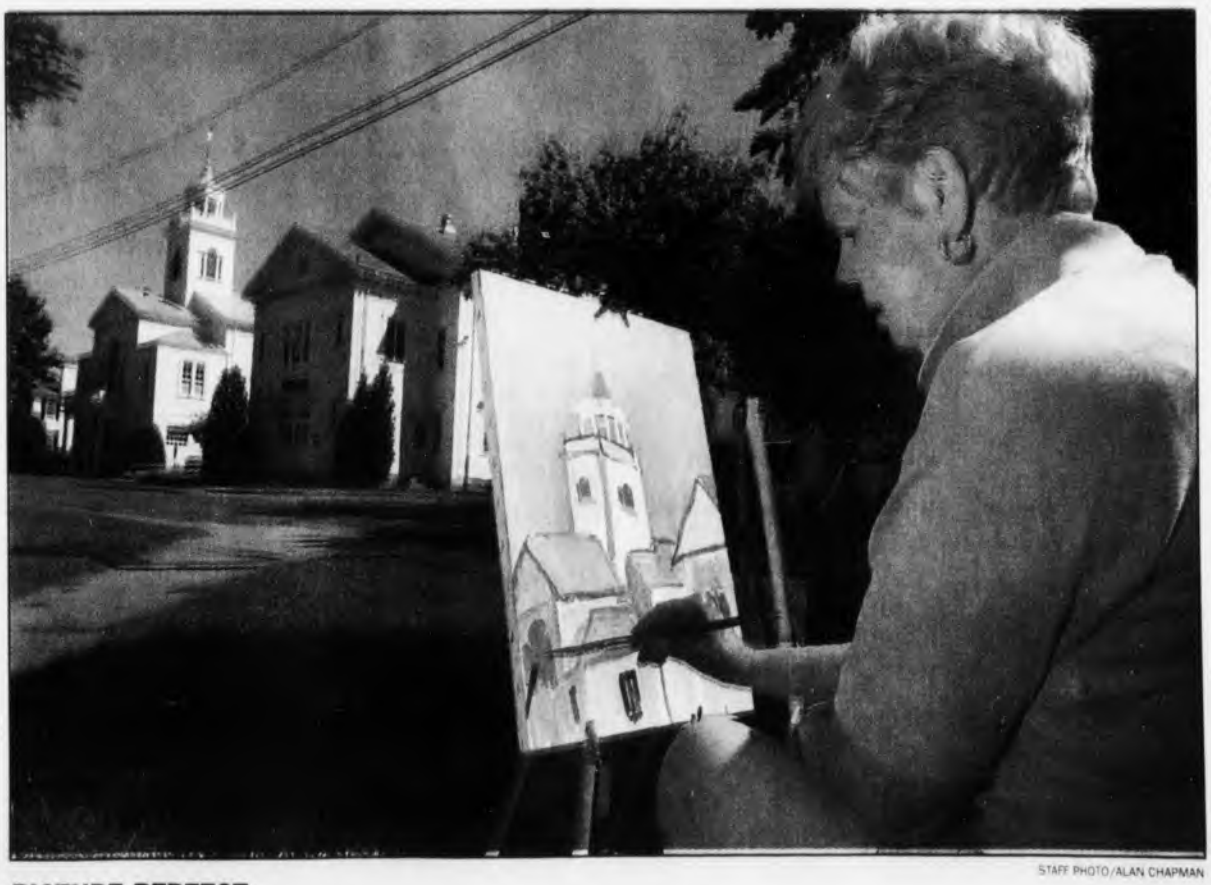
"We're going down roads we never went down before, and the buses need more time to do their routes."

— Deer Hill School Principal Paul Callahan

Now imagine you're seven years old and you're stuck in school.

This is the problem plaguing Cohasset elementary school students, which can make going to school less enjoyable.

More students and longer routes have backed up the town's afternoon school bus service to the point where it isn't uncommon for students to have to wait in their classrooms for up to a half an hour until their bus arrives.



In an effort to have school buses actually at the Deer Hill and Osgood schools when class ends in the afternoon, the Cohasset School Committee unanimously voted last week to start and dismiss the school day 15 minutes later than last year.

Starting Sept. 5, the first day of school, Deer Hill students must be in their classrooms by 8:35 a.m., and will be dismissed at 2:35 p.m. Osgood students will be marked late if not in school by 9:05 a.m., and will be dismissed at 3:05 p.m. The start and finish times at the middle/high school will not change.

School officials say the 15-minute change should make a huge difference in the effort to get Cohasset's schoolchildren home on time.

"We're putting more kids on the bus, and it takes longer to drive the route," said Deer Hill School Principal Paul Callahan, who headed up the Transportation Study Committee, which looked at the Special Town Meeting

Selectmen are looking to hold the special fall Town Meeting on Monday, Oct. 29 in the Sullivan Gymnasium at Cohasset Middle/High School at 7: 30 p.m. Town Manager Mark Haddad will check with school officials to make sure the gymnasium is available, and report back to selectmen.

Residents have seven days after the Town Meeting date is set to submit citizens petitions. The petition must contain 100 valid signatures from town residents.

Playground closed

The town Parks Commissioners — also known as the Board of Selectmen — have closed the playground behind the old Osgood School for safety reasons.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he has received a couple of calls from parents reporting their children had been hurt playing on the community-built playground. He added that the town spent $1,500 last year on the playground, "and didn't make a dent."

Haddad estimated the cost to make the playground safe between $10,000 and $15,000. He said the playground would have to be closed for the upcoming library construction project anyway.

Protest letter

Selectmen voted Tuesday to join with the town of Canton in protesting the state legislature's adoption of an early retirement bill for teachers.

The board said they support the bill, but don't support the fact it is an unfunded state mandate, which are restricted under Proposition 2-1/2 regulations.

Local group seeks grants to help cleanup Straits Pond

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Despite its natural beauty, Straits Pond can be a less than ideal place to live.

Algae bloom that has, at times, covered the entire surface area of the pond. Clouds of non-biting mosquitoes called midges can make it impossible for residents to step-outside and appreciate their view during warm months. And it's not unusual to find shopping carriages making a home in the knee-deep muck around the pond's edges.

All has contributed to Cohasset and Hull residents coming together in the form of the Strait's Pond Watershed Association and write two state grant applications that could one day help make the water clean enough to swim in, and allow residents to sit outside bug-free.

"To get Straits Pond back to being ecologically sound, there's not just one thing that needs to be done," said association president Lawry Reid, from Hull.

"We want to clean the pond and then keep it clean," added Merle Graham, of Jerusalem Road in Cohasset, also an officer with the association.

The first grant, a Lakes and Ponds Initiative grant offered by the state Department of Environmental Management, would provide up to $300,000 to increase tidal flow into the pond.

Two man-made barriers have essentially turned the 92-acre tidal area into a stagnant pond, said Reid. He explained that in the late 1940s, a temporary dam was built on a ledge across from the Greek Orthodox Church in Cohasset, and then never completely removed. Also in the late '40s, a temporary footbridge from a peninsula to an island within the pond was replaced by a causeway with a set of 12-inch culverts.

"But the culverts were placed too high, and generally speaking, water doesn't flow through there at all," he said. "About one-third of the pond gets very little to no flow because of the blockage."

Reid said the only source of inflow and outflow into the pond is from the tide gates at West Corner.

"We have nutrient overload from algae and we need to flush it out," he said.

The grant would provide money to study the flow problems, and figure the proper amount of tidal water that could be allowed into the pond without flooding abutting homes, and then how much water can be let out to avoid fetid mudflats.

Simply breaching the landbridge between the pond and Black Rock Beach would cause another problem, according to Reid.

"At low-tide, the water at Black Rock Beach is about three feet lower than the bottom of the pond. If we opened it up, it would completely drain the pond," he said

The grant would also contain money for pest management.

"I've read in a legislative report from back in 1954 about midges around Straits Pond," Reid said. "There were years when you really couldn't go outside. You couldn't open doors. They would fly through screens." He said in the three years he has been around the pond, the midge problem has started to rear its head again.

Birdhouses in Straits Pond are helping control the midge population.

Graham said the problem was so bad last year, "you couldn't keep an outside light on."

Reid said the state originally used arsenic to kill the bugs, but has since switched a less-toxic chemical. The grant would look into a pest management program that could include increasing the pond's alewife stock.

The association has also installed birdhouses in the pond for tree swallows which feed on the bugs, and hopes to increase the number of birdhouses in the pond each year. He said the birdhouses have to be installed on top of plastic piping stuck into the bottom of the pond to prevent them from being taken over by sparrows.

Reid also said the grant has some money earmarked to harvest the existing algae from the pond.

However, he described competition for the three or four Lakes and Pond Initiative grants as "severe," and that 24 other ponds have applied.

"It's very stiff competition," said Reid.

The second grant the association has applied for is a $34,000 matching Coastal Pollution Remediation grant.

"We have a serious nutrient problem in the pond from sewer run-off," he said "About 48 percent of the phosphorous in the pond comes from septic systems."

Reid hopes most of the problem will be solved now that most of Hull and North Cohasset are on the sewer. However, he is still concerned with the 70 storm drains that flow unfiltered into the pond, as well as run-off from Rattlesnake Run.

"Generally, anything in the watershed area ends up in the pond," he said.

The grant would study two run-off areas in Hull, and then develop an implementation plan. The grant required a $3,500 commitment from both Cohasset and Hull, which both towns have approved.

"There's a tendency for both Hull and Cohasset to not think of the pond as theirs," Reid said. "It sort of gets lost in the shuffle."

But with both towns signing on in support, Reid was optimistic.

"We're very encouraged that the towns' selectmen have been very supportive of the effort to clean up the pond," he said.

The Lakes and Ponds Initiative grant also requires some contributions by the towns, but Hull and Cohasset will be able to count the money spent paying off the sewer projects as its match.

The association itself has taken steps, such as conducting annual clean-ups.

"This past spring we filled dump trucks with the stuff we had taken out of the pond," said Graham.

The formation of the Straits Pond Watershed Association itself is a recent positive sign for the pond.

"What was really needed was for residents to form an association," said Reid. "People have been trying to form one for 50 years and had never been able to establish one. The association was an association waiting to happen."

He said the association averages between 20 and 30 people at its quarterly meetings, 30 to 40 at its annual meeting, and an e-mail list of 60-70 names, not including town and state officials.

"Hopefully with the Straits Pond Watershed Association, we now have that vehicle through which residents are able to maintain a long-term commitment to the pond," said Reid.

Olde fashioned picnic basket auction

The Cohasset Historical Society announces an "Olde Fashioned Picnic Basket Auction," fundraising event, Sept. 8 at 1 p.m. at the Lothrop House at 14 Summer St.

Bring a creative picnic lunch for two to be auctioned off to the highest bidder. Then join the festivities by successfully bidding on and enjoying the picnic lunch of your choice. Suggestions include:

• In addition to lunch, customize your basket with an enticing extra, such as gift certificates, lottery tickets, free lessons, specialty items. The more creative the basket, the bigger the donation to the historical society.

• Basket essentials: appetizers/soup, sandwiches, munchies (veggies, chips), salad (pasta, Caesar, fruit), dessert, disposable utensils, dishes, napkins.

• Attach a note to the outside of your basket. Specify your basket's menu items and any special features so that the auctioneer can "sell" its virtues to the audience.

• Bring a blanket or lawn chair.

• Beverages will be provided by the society.

Don't forget, this is a fund-raiser — the more attractive the basket, the higher the bidding will go.

For reservations and information, call Tam Elliott, 781-383-2169; Barbara Elliott, 781-383-1154; or Kathy O'Malley, 781-383-9765.

Glastonbury Abbey priest helps save Vatican art

Celebrates 25 years at local parish

By Tim Llewellyn
CORRESPONDENT

The community of Glastonbury Abbey paused recently to celebrate the 25th anniversary of Father Richard Bourgeois' ordination as a Benedictine priest.

"In many aspects of life we fail to see the proverbial forest for the trees," said Bourgeois. "But moments like this, when we celebrate 25 years of anything, give us a clear view of the forest."

For Bourgeois, this forest has grown thick with a sense of community that he cultivated both on the South Shore and abroad for the past quarter of a century.

Recently, however, Bourgeois' role has changed. In December he was called back to Rome by Cardinal Szoka, President of the Governatorato, the equivalent of president of the Vatican City State. Szoka appointed Bourgeois to be the North American representative for the Patrons of the Arts office in the Vatican Museums.

The Patrons of the Arts office was established in 1995 to help raise money for the restoration and conservation of the Vatican's vast art collection. In its first six years, the new office has raised somewhere between seven and eight million dollars to help rescue the irreplaceable masterpieces housed in the Vatican Museums.

Bourgeois was ordained June 5, 1976 by Cardinal Medeiros for the Abbey in Hingham, ten years after joining the community at the age of 19. As a member of Glastonbury, he went on to study at St. Leo's in Florida, UMass Boston, the St. John's School of Philosophy and earned his License in Sacred Philosophy at the Pontifical University of St. Anselmo in Rome.

Bourgeois has put this extensive education to use in his varied and evolving missions as a Benedictine priest.

"On a pastoral level, in the course of my 25 years, I have basically been preparing people for marriage and celebrating their weddings... and consequently the baptism of their children," Bourgeois said of his work on the South Shore.

Bourgeois has also spent a good deal of his time traveling throughout the country speaking about the liturgy and preaching on living the Christian life.

"My goal," Bourgeois said, "was to serve in a capacity within which I would be able to activate and animate a realization of community."

The more than 200 people who came to celebrate his anniversary July 22 at the Abbey were certainly a testament to Bourgeois' commitment to community.

Father Richard Bourgeois

"I think Father Richard has a very good pastoral sense, and many people are attracted to his ministry," said Nicholas Morcone, the Abbot at Glastonbury.

Culturally ecumenical

Bourgeois points out that the fundraising efforts, while sponsored by the Vatican, is by no means limited to Catholics. He sees these restoration projects as a "culturally ecumenical" opportunity to save great art and, as the Vatican Museums receive no funding from either the Holy See or the Italian government, private patrons are critical to the survival of the collection.

And Bourgeois is certainly the right man for the job. With an encyclopedic knowledge of art and its history, as well as a high-energy, magnetic personality, Bourgeois should prove to be an effective fundraiser.

"Richard has the ability to make friends and speak to anybody on any level; that's his real skill," said long time friend Carol Stanton.

No joy in Mudville

It's 6 p.m. Monday and a Channel 7 satellite truck is parked right outside The Hingham Journal office. This particular truck is equipped with a 20-foot pole that stretches toward the sky about five feet from our second-floor window. The hum of the truck's generator provides a kind of background music as we type away on our computer keyboards.

Channel 4 is around the corner on the old rail bed. And New England Cable News [NECN] is parked a little ways down South Street.

Television cameras are in Hingham Square again.

As local reporters, we don't have to ask why. There has not been a major accident, gas leak, fire or crime of any sort. The cameras are here for the same reason they were here from time to time last year, last decade and the decade before that: Greenbush is back in the news.

So why did the cameras whirl on Monday? Earlier that day, Environmental Secretary Bob Durand released his decision approving the Environmental Impact Report, dubbed an EIR, on Greenbush.

The long-anticipated finding sent off vibrations through the news media that would register on the Richter scale. But here in Hingham and environs, we all know it's too soon to celebrate or cry — no matter which side of the tracks you're on.

In essence by approving the EIR, Sec. Durand said the train meets the necessary environmental criteria with a few conditions and issued a certificate for the railroad line. Under almost any other circumstances this would be a homerun for a major project. You would think — because the Greenbush line would provide residents in Scituate, Cohasset and Hingham with commuter rail service to Boston for the first time since 1959 — the revelry would begin.

Yet there is no joy in Mudville tonight.

For those who want the train – the secretary has affirmed what they've known from the start: the train is the best, most efficient way to move large numbers of people to Boston and back.

But over 15 years of ups and downs, proponents know it's too soon to celebrate. Stuck in rush-hour gridlock on Route 3 and the Southeast Expressway, proponents yearn for an alternative but know when it comes to the controversial railroad line, there are no guarantees.

There have been years of environmental studies, federal involvement through the Army Corps of Engineers, historic impact reviews, mitigation deliberations, ballot votes, special Town Meetings and the Hingham town lawsuit.

Now the opponents, highly organized through AfTA [Advocates for Transportation Alternatives], are waiting for their day in court. The group, headed by John Bewick, a former secretary of environmental affairs, is poised to seek an injunction stopping the MBTA from proceeding with the rail project until a new EIR is conducted.

They claim the EIR is nothing more than an advocate's brief giving alternatives such as commuter boats short shrift. They say the train is an expensive throwback to times gone by and there are more efficient, cleaner alternatives.

Like a baseball game, AfTA plots strategy. It hurls accusations at the MBTA that paint the state authority as both inept and dishonest.

So where do we go from here?

At this point, it's not clear if the Town of Scituate will also sue the MBTA, as it threatened last week. It's also to soon to tell if Weymouth will agree with the secretary's plan for the Landing. But AfTA has made it clear it will head to court. Legal challenges can add considerable time to a project as evidenced by Hingham's lawsuit that stalled the train for years.

The secretary's decision is a big step forward and the progress that towns like Hingham and Cohasset have had with their respective mitigation agreements with the MBTA should also bolster the project. But until that first spade of dirt is dug or the first sections of track are laid – Greenbush is still anybody's bet.

Is the EIR a base hit, homerun – or will Greenbush ultimately strike out?

As they say in the TV industry, stay tuned.

Mariners Park

TO THE EDITOR:

Cohasset Board of Selectmen,

I think "Mariners Park" is a great name for the harbour park at the end of my street.

I remember many Cohasset lobster fisherman fast at sea also, including Mickey Figueiredo, a very popular and well-loved native of the town.

Mariners Park would be most appropriate!

CRC addresses McMorris letter

TO THE EDITOR:

Please allow me to address a few items raised in a letter to the editor submitted Aug. 2 by Selectman McMorris in reference to the Village revitalization initiative.

Since the revitalization initiative was formally established in 1996 by the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce (with encouragement from the long established Village Renaissance committee), and subsequently strengthened by the formation of the Village Revitalization Task Force in 1998 by the Cohasset Board of Selectmen, the goals to build new sidewalks, improve parking, and provide streetscape improvements to enhance the aesthetics of the village have remained constant. Selectman McMorris is correct that in 2000 the CRC was established through private donations to accelerate this ongoing initiative by offering the town assistance to fund the public visioning, design, planning and implementation of the village and harbor improvements. However, the concept has not gone "far afield" as Ms. McMorris suggests, it has indeed remained focused on improving sidewalks, parking, safety and accessibility, and aesthetics of the Village area.

Ms. McMorris is wondering "what happened to the offer to spruce up the village with private funds?" Well to date, the CRC has spent over $200,000 (of $420,000 raised through the generosity of over 50 local residents and businesses) towards the planning, design and administration of the village and harbor improvements. The CRC has coordinated six public workshops and numerous meetings with officials, residents and business owners in an effort to build a community consensus on the improvement opportunities. Though flower planting and new benches are important, the current objective of the CRC is to ensure the long-term economic and aesthetic viability of the village area by creating a plan to address safety and infrastructure deficiencies first, followed by long overdue aesthetic improvements.

However, well aware of the need for aesthetic improvements, the CRC initiated the joint purchase with the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce and the Board of Selectmen of six new village trash receptacles installed in May 2001, which can be seen around the village. Also, in early July of this year the Board of Selectmen accepted an offer by the CRC to clean and maintain the James Walkway, as well as areas within the rear parking lot and along the village streets. The CRC then arranged for and financed the cleanup and planting of the park area between Tedeschi's and French Memories and for the cleanup and ongoing maintenance of these village areas to compliment the established efforts of the Village Renaissance Committee. Clearly, the CRC embraces Selectman McMorris's idea of adopting a public area for beautification program.

Ms. McMorris's expressed a sense of alarm that "Greenbush-related mitigation grants" are being discussed to help implement the village improvement plans. The CRC does advocate for this and is simply echoing the position of the town's Mitigation Committee and the Board of Selectmen who have directed the MBTA to reconstruct the town parking lot and the Ripley Road and Pleasant Street intersection, a village focal point. The CRC also recently assisted the town in applying for a $1.5 million Public Works Economic Development Grant to specifically help pay for new sidewalks and streetscape improvements throughout the village in conjunction with the Greenbush project. Why piecemeal long overdue village improvements when the town has the opportunity, the funds and the engineering plans all in-hand to do a full context project?

Not only is it relevant to include these potential funding sources when discussing how to pay for the village improvements, other municipal funding for village area projects should be included as well. These include the $169,000 grant the town received in 1998 to construct a new sidewalk along South Main Street at the base of Saint Stephen's Church, and the sidewalk and road reconstruction funds included in the final phase of the James Brook Flood Control project which runs under the village. Linking these projects and integrating the funds will allow for design consistency and efficient expenditure of time and money.

To answer Selectman McMorris's question about whether such public funds should be used for these Town improvements within and around the village, I suggest that of course they should. These plans benefit the entire community by restoring and updating its unique and historic Town Center. Though the goal of the CRC is to have state and federal grants pay for 80 percent of the improvement costs, town funds and private donations should be expected to cover the balance.

Whether the town wishes to re-construct the village with asphalt, concrete or brick surfaces, a true public/private partnership on the local, state and federal level, is the best avenue to secure construction money for the community. The Town will decide the desirable degree and scale of improvements, and the manner in which mitigation funds, grant money, and town allocations are administered. To be successful, however, requires the patience, cooperation, and collaboration of the community as a whole, an objective the CRC will continue to facilitate.

Residents and public officials are needed at the public meetings and forums to directly express their ideas and concerns in the design process of improving the village area for not only today, but for future generations. Everyone should feel free to visit the CRC office at 87 Elm St. to review the current plans and to question and comment upon them. Afterall, simply planting flowers and applying Band-Aids to problem areas is no substitute for perceiving the big picture and planning soundly for long term, quality improvements.

Parents are setting the wrong example

TO THE EDITOR:

The recent Mariner editorial, "What's wrong with this picture?" regarding DARE and PALS "all but [disappearing] from the scene" coupled with the insightful letter from Jane Lanzillotti was good, but will the right people get it?

It's pretty hard to run programs which help associate the cops with their positive community efforts when the leaders are both disrespectful and condescending to them. Proof of this lies in the abandoning of DARE, PALS, and Academy efforts, as well as the reflex action of some kids and parents to sing the "do you know who I am?" "I know your Chief" songs when stopped. This demonstrates a "Camp Cohasset" mindset, where cops are considered contemptible guardians/counselors of errant children, rather then those who frequently perform pretty well substantiated interventions before something worse occurs, if all are lucky. Seems as if by the time the cops stop people they are one step away from some disaster, which if unabated, puts both victims and the cops in very difficult circumstances. You can't explain that to the my-kids-are-picked-on parents, however.

Ms. Lanzillotti's well chosen words about the amount of activities available to kids is also notable. However, the do-as-I-say-not-as-I-do mindset doesn't work. How many parents engage in the activities dealing with their big-screen TVs, VCR's Nintendo's, stereo's, etc.? Seems as if many parents get together for parties with friends and "drink booze and smoke a little reefer," so why shouldn't the kids?

The recent Little League fundraiser proved to be a bash which required police intervention on more than one occasion, showing not only disrespect for the neighbors, disturbed enough to call for intervention, but the same behavior we say is not acceptable for kids, the supposed beneficiary of the effort. It's not the first, last, or only party of this nature, but perhaps one of the most contradictory, and if you don't think the kids know about these bashes, you're just kidding yourself.

As the editorial stated: "Certainly for a town with as many smart people as Cohasset has — getting a positive police-student program underway is not rocket science." It's not. It is a matter of seeing that leaders set examples of what is expected from others. If they choose not to, then it's up to voters and citizens to choose what they want in leaders. That's not rocket science either.

Maybe, just maybe, future headlines about Cohasset will not deal with inappropriate executive interference with the police, Secret Service intervention with students, suspended athletes, drunken party arrests, petty administrative fights, and the other negative community tattoos.

We're just fooling ourselves to think expectations of the "privileged" kids are different than what we allow for the "privileged" parents.

Three local teachers will learn about retired life

TEACHERS WITH CLASS

ELIZABETH OWENS-RIGBY

When school begins in Cohasset on Sept. 5, three teachers from the middle/high school will not respond to the ringing of bells as they have for so many years. Instead, Ron Emmons, George Fortin, and Dennis Walsh will be making their own schedules as they learn about living in retirement. All three men taught for more than 35 years and provided several generations of Cohasset children with important pieces of their education.

Retiring Cohasset High School teachers George Fortin and Dennis Walsh at CHS graduation exercises in June.

Mr. Emmons was an English and drama teacher for 39 years and spent 33 of those years teaching at Cohasset High School. He ended his tenure as a Cohasset teacher and drama coach by staging his ninth production of "Godspell," which was also the first production he staged in Cohasset. Mr. Emmons thinks of teaching as a creative art where the teacher should inspire children to think and want to become life-long learners. He enjoyed the professional challenges he felt as a Cohasset teacher, which enabled him to continue learning for himself and his students. Some highlights of his career have been Cohasset High School's many years of participating in the Massachusetts Drama Festival, communicating with former students, who have been inspired by their teacher to go into careers in the arts or teaching, and sharing in the pride of his students' accomplishments. As Mr. Emmons begins his life as a retiree, he says he will miss his students and his supportive colleagues. He is looking forward to spending time at his new home in Wellesley with his wife, Linda French.

Mr. Fortin has been a world language teacher at Cohasset Middle School for 34 of his 35 years as a teacher. He has found his years as a Cohasset teacher to be very rewarding, and noted proudly that throughout all of the educational changes during his career, CMS continued to have a rigorous program and high expectations for its students. Some of his most rewarding moments occurred annually when students with no prior knowledge of a foreign language developed the ability to communicate in that language. Mr. Fortin remarked on his overwhelmingly positive experiences with his students in all of his roles as foreign language teacher, soccer and tennis coach, and guide for foreign travel or exchange programs. Although Mr. Fortin will miss teaching French, his students, and his supportive colleagues, he is looking forward to not being committed to a daily schedule. He plans to travel with his wife, Judi, and to spend a lot of time with his three grandchildren. In addition, he will have time to devote to his good-weather hobby, aviation and his bad-weather hobby, woodworking.

Mr. Walsh has been a math teacher for 38 years, and taught for 32 of those years at Cohasset High School. During his career as a teacher, he has found it particularly rewarding to assist his students through some of the more difficult math concepts and to work with his students outside of the classroom by coaching student athletes. Mr. Walsh has seen many changes in math education, most notably the ability of teachers and students to explore more diverse concepts with the aid of computers and graphing calculators. A highlight in Mr. Walsh's career occurred when he spent four years working at St. Michael's College School in Canada. During his tenure there he worked with Father John Egsgard, a former President of The National Council of Teachers of Mathematics (NCTM). The NCTM is the leading research organization regarding the best mathematics teaching practices and Mr. Walsh remembers these years as a time of great professional growth. Other highlights included helping Cohasset High School begin to offer computer courses to its students and coaching the 1988 hockey team to the state quarter finals. As a retiree, Mr. Walsh plans to spend more time with his family and to travel with his wife, Casey. His other retirement ideas include going back to college or perhaps working on a lobster boat.

These three retirees have devoted many years of their lives to the Cohasset Public Schools community. On behalf of the community, the Cohasset Teachers' Association thanks them for their professional service and wishes them many happy years of retirement.

Elizabeth Owens-Rigby is a member of the Cohasset Teachers' Association.

Swift's job performance a non-issue

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

MODERATOR - Good evening, fellow Bay Staters, and welcome to "Heed the Press," the weekly half hour in which the events of the past seven days are explained to you in a fair and balanced manner. Tonight the subject of our analysis is "Jane Swift — Can She Be Reelected in 2002?"

Our panel tonight is made up of Mr. Smith, the awarded-winning columnist of the Gazette, and Mr. Jones, who is known for his penetrating questions on station WHY-TV, and Mr . . . Mr . . . (aside to aide) Harold, who is that last guy? Oh, he's just a voter, eh? Good idea. We'll get some input from the public itself.

We'll start with you, Mr. Smith.

SMITH - I think the fact that her husband has been married four times is going to play a key role in gaining her the Republican nomination. It's a matter of family values. The people of Massachusetts simply won't stand for a governor whose husband has been married four times.

JONES - I think the fact that her husband has a homosexual son by a previous marriage will hurt her with the general population, which, our poll has determined, is mostly heterosexual. I'm sure the people of Massachusetts will never vote for someone whose stepson is homosexual.

Not only that, but she was going to drive to Rhode Island in her own gas-guzzling SUV.

VOTER - She's been acting governor for six months now, how's she been doing?

MODERATOR - A good question, sir. Mr. Smith?

SMITH - She started off her career as a statewide official by "borrowing" a state police helicopter to take her home to North Adams for Thanksgiving. That's an unheard of action by a politician in Massachusetts. Anyone who has had to drive a long distance to get home for the holidays will find it difficult to vote for her.

JONES - And she alienated mothers throughout the Commonwealth when she had her State House aides look after her daughter while she worked. Other mothers have to spend their hard-earned dollars hiring baby-sitters or putting their children out to day care. Next thing you know she'll be sending an aide out for her dry cleaning.

VOTER - But how has she been doing as governor?

MODERATOR - A good question, sir. (Aside to aide) Where did you find this guy, Harold?

SMITH - My paper exposed the fact that she was going to take her whole family — the twins, daughter Elizabeth and husband Chuck — on a state-funded junket to Providence for a three-day governor's conference.

Not only that, but she was going to drive to Rhode Island in her own gas-guzzling SUV.

JONES - And my TV channel exposed the fact that her campaign committee received a $1,000 contribution from the owner of a strip club that was trying open an adult entertainment center in Boston. She gave it back but what does that say for her family values?

VOTER - But how has she been doing as governor?

MODERATOR - (Aside to aide) Harold, get rid of this guy during the next break. I don't care how you do it. Tell him his house is on fire or his son has been kidnapped. Just get rid of his. He's spoiling this whole damn broadcast.

The Cohasset Republican Town Committee will hold its annual cookout fund-raiser at the beautiful seaside home of Julie and Ted Guild, 365 Jerusalem Road, Cohasset, on Sunday, Aug. 26, from 4:30 to 7:30 p.m. Everyone is invited.

Special guests will include GOP Senate Majority Leader Brian Lees, GOP House Leader Francis Marini, District Attorney Mike Sullivan, other elected officials of Plymouth and Norfolk Counties and the Cape, and a surprise guest.

To reserve a place or for further information call Janet Fogarty 617-786-8200 or Mike Smith 781-383-2387. Parking will be at Sandy Beach with a shuttle to the Guild home. In case of rain, the picnic will be held at Bates Hall, Second Congregational Church, 45 Highland Avenue (opposite Historic Cohasset Common).

Hedlund on racing bill committee

Senator Robert L. Hedlund was named to the Racing/Simulcasting Bill Conference Committee. The House and Senate passed separate versions of the bill, which makes a series of changes to horse and dog racing and simulcasting of races in the Commonwealth.

The bill was a byproduct of testimony given in front of a Special Racing Commission on which Hedlund sat, and deliberations that flowed from that fact gathering process. The Senate debated the last month, and adopted a version that differed from the House of Representatives' legislation in a number of ways.

The Senate version, for example, requires a study of temperatures at which it is safe to race greyhounds, an amendment offered by Hedlund and others. The Senate version also favors: adding representation from labor and the Wonderland and Raynham tracks to the Greyhound Adoption Trust Fund Board approved in the bill; including a 9-member commission to determine the viability of off-track betting; a different definition of "racing performance" and simulcast requirements than the House; provisions for purse increases dedicated to the Raynham Capital Improvement Trust Fund and greater purse increases than the House's version to the Wonderland Capital Improvement Trust Fund. The Senate's version also calls for a "sunsetting" of the bill (automatic repeal) in three years.

HEALTH NOTES

Rainy weather and water quality

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

You may have seen the recent notices at the Cohasset Sailing Club and at several sites on Bassing Beach stating that the beach is closed after rain events more than half an inch, although, they were torn down within a day of their placement. The fact is that this summer, with several wet spells, pollution has risen in many of our waterways. The most recent sampling of water quality (Aug. 14) showed enterococcus levels more than twice safe swimming levels at the sailing club, the Cohasst Yacht Club, and at Sandy Cove. This condition has prompted us to gather another round of samples and to take some additional steps:

First, both the yacht club and the sailing club will be requested to fly red flags at their yardarm on days when pollution levels are high. Also, the harbormaster will be notified. Secondly, Sandy Cove residents will be notified by a message system to be worked out. High readings are very sensitive to tidal flushing, and readings during incoming tides and at high tide will tend to be low. They will then rise, depending on mixing and other factors during falling tide and will reach their highest levels slightly after low tide. (high tide occurs at different times at each location in the harbor).

This summer, with several wet spells, pollution has risen in many of our waterways.

The origin of the problem is mainly from storm-water runoff. After a storm, millions of gallons of water from the Gulf River and James Brook watersheds are discharged into the harbor. A potential additional source, but on a much lesser scale, could occur in storms when groundwater enters the Town's older sewer pipes to such an extent that the treatment plant can't keep up with the additional flows. So far, this year the Sewer Department reports that it has been able to keep ahead of storm flows. Normally, during storm events, the plant settles out most of the pollution, and the effect on the harbor is probably negligible.

Deer Hill, Osgood times have changed problem and recommended the time change. "We're going down roads we never went down before, and the buses need more time to do their routes. If the buses are late to the Deer Hill, they're going to be late to the Osgood."

Stephen Ingle, representing Joseph Ingle Bus Service, Inc., the company in charge of Cohasset's school bus service, said the problem "starts by leaving the middle/high school late and mushrooms from there."

The old school schedule had Deer Hill students released just 14 minutes after the middle/high school — not nearly enough time for drivers to complete their routes to areas such as West Corner, and make it back in time for the Deer Hill students.

Callahan also said that the problem is worsened when parents, frustrated at not knowing when their child is going to get home, drive to the schools to pick them up.

"We'll have 50-70 cars picking up kids, and it only takes 20 to back up the line with the buses stuck in it," he said.

The transportation committee looked at a number of factors in making its recommendation, including the number of buses, the bus routes, how many stops on each route, how many kids on each bus, the learning time needed at each school, and driveway/parking issues at each school.

Two different proposals would have shaved five minutes off the middle/high school's day, but Principal Dr. Michael Jones was "equivocally opposed" to shortening the day.

"We currently try to teach a year-course in one semester, a 135-hour course in 108 hours," he said. "To cut it any further would be unconscionable."

Another proposal was to start and dismiss the middle/high school five minutes earlier, but Jones again opposed it, saying it was hard enough already to get teenagers to school by 7:20 a.m., let alone 7:15 a.m.

The proposal to move the Deer Hill and Osgood start times back by 15 minutes was supported both by Callahan, new Osgood School Principal Janet Sheehan, and teachers' union president Ed Leonard.

"This has been an escalating problem over the years," Leonard said. He added by sending the students home on time, teachers would also be able to start their after-school meetings on time.

School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo said some people would be unhappy "because it's change," but he thought for the most part people would support the time changes.

School Committee Chairman Stephanie Noble warned that the later start time could result in a bump in the before-school program. She also asked the elementary school principals to be "very, very, very, clear" what time parents could begin dropping their children off at school.

Noble also said that the time change was just one part of the overall busing puzzle, and that the transportation committee would continue to examine issues such as whether to expand or condense bus stops, or whether to change routes.

Schools finish fiscal year in black

Switch to new accounting system

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset Schools Business Manager Ivan Klimko expects to close the books on the 2001 fiscal year with the school department nearly $29,000 in the black.

Last year, Cohasset schools were allocated $9,598,759.40 for educating the town's 1,339 students. As of Thursday night, when Klinko appeared before the School Committee, the schools had spent $9,418,619.74. He expects to spend another $151,348.25 on outstanding bills.

Teacher salaries and benefits made up the biggest chunk of the budget, at $5,411,101.10.

The School Committee said the remaining $28,791.41 balance will be given back to the town.

"We have lived within the budget, thanks to the hard work by everybody," said Superintendent Edward Malvey.

He said the schools were able to save money by using "cost-saving strategies" when it came to bidding out school supplies, and "holding back" some expenditures. He also credited Student Services Coordinator Stephen Kaplan for "controlling the special education finances."

As for the current fiscal year, which began July 1, Klimko introduced the School Committee to the new state-mandated accounting system. He said in an effort to increase district accountability, school systems across the state have switched over to the same accounting system.

"There really was no choice," Klimko explained, flipping through the two-inch thick instruction manual he prepared and handed out to the board. But he called some of the changes "just good accounting," and said the old system had become "antiquated."

He gave the example that under the old system, the school was recording money spent on computers under "audio/visual."

The system breaks down into eight segments, with can then be further broken down into smaller accounts, although he said he wants to keep the number of sub-accounts to a minimum.

The conversion to the new system involved Klimko having to sort through the budgeted account and redistribute the money into the new system. He said there was $8,000 he wasn't able to find a proper home for, and simply created a "Business Office Account."

"But there is no more money or no less money, just new accounts," he said.

Truck ban on Summer Street rejected

Selectmen rejected a request by Summer Street residents to ban trucks from the narrow, winding road. Earlier this summer, dozens of residents petitioned the board to make a number of safety changes to the road, including redesigning the Summer/Border Street intersection, and banning trucks.

Police Chief Brian Noonan, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln and DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield all wrote letters against the ban.

A Norfolk County Board of Engineers survey reported the average speed to be about 20 miles per hour, lower than the posted 25 miles per hour. Police Chief Brian Noonan, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln and Department of Public Works Superintendent Harold Litchfield all wrote letters against the ban.

But the board said fighting MassHighway to institute the truck ban would be, in Selectman Merle Brown's words, "like beating your head against a wall."

Brown explained the town had tried to get a truck ban on Upper King Street, and presented evidence such as the close proximity to a reservoir, the narrow road, and a sufficient detour. But the request was ultimately denied. The only current truck ban is heading down Pond Street towards the harbor, because of the steep hill before the railroad tracks.

However, Selectman Thomas Callahan said the proposal did raise the issue of the need for safer sidewalks along the street.

Planners like initial boatyard proposal business on the site, as well as expanding public access to the water. She also said renovations would keep the buildings on the site looking the same, and would not be painted black and gray, Roy's "corporate colors."

The project has not yet run into any snags in the state permitting process with the Department of Environmental Protection, and will be able to keep its Chapter 90 permits as a water-dependent use.

The plan does need approval from the town Conservation Commission because work would be done within a watershed area, and relief from the Zoning Board of Appeals for parking and to create the condos.

The site is currently zoned for water-front business, and does not allow for residential housing. It would also need a variance for parking. The site, as is, is an existing non-conforming use because its square footage would require 60 parking spaces under zoning rules, said Shropshire. The renovated site would reduce the needed spaces to approximately 20. However, because of space constraints, Roy is proposing to build just seven.

Shropshire said even if all Roy did was renovate the buildings he'd have to still provide 60 spaces.

Moore said the parking issue is one that he can see the town working with Roy on.

"Whenever we're usually dealing with a situation where people are seeking relief, they're usually seeking it from some sort of hardship they've created for themselves," he said. "This is probably a case where it at least deserves to be looked at."

As of Tuesday, Zoning Board Chairman Woody Chittick had not seen any plans and wasn't able to comment on the project.

Bids opened for Route 228 reconstruction

MassHighway Commissioner Matthew J. Amorello today announced construction bids for the reconstruction of Route 228 in Cohasset and Hingham have been opened.

Todesca Equipment Co. Inc. of Readville, submitted the apparent low bid of $2,297,723. Five other contractors also submitted bids.

Route 228 is an important roadway for commuters and commerce in Cohasset and Hingham, and this project will provide major improvement" said Amorello. "The Swift Administration is committed to projects of this type in every corner of the Commonwealth."

My thanks to Governor Swift and Commissioner Amorello for providing Massachusetts with a top-notch transportation infrastructure. The Swift Administration continues to ensure that road improvements such as the reconstruction of Route 228 are moving forward in Cohasset, Hingham and throughout the South Shore, said, state Senator Robert L. Hedlund.

The project consists of minor roadway and sidewalk widening and resurfacing from the Hull Town Line to Merrymount Road. Work also calls for drainage improvements, new traffic signs and pavement markings. The roadway work is expected to begin this fall and to be completed by mid-2003.

This project is part of an overall effort by the Swift Administration to dedicate more than $700 million a year over the next five years to road and bridge spending in Massachusetts. This amount is independent of Boston's Central Artery project.

Selectmen support village revitalization concept

VRTF estimates cost between $1.7 and $2.4 million

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Village Revitalization Task Force chairman Tim O'Brien didn't get the full support from Cohasset selectmen he had hoped for Tuesday, but it was a step in the right direction.

As Cecil Group representative David O'Connor went through a new, tweaked version of the proposed Cohasset Village improvement plans, selectmen voiced their support for a majority of the project's general concepts. The board did not take any official votes, and insisted the VRTF get additional comments from other town boards such as the Planning Board, and Growth & Development Committee before it makes a formal commitment to the project.

The VRTF also hopes to meet with the Design & Review Board, but it was not clear at Tuesday's meeting whether the board was still functioning. The task force presented its proposal alongside Dean Rizzo, who is the executive director of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private-non-profit that has provided funding for a majority of the planning effort.

Selectmen supported such things as a crosswalk across Ripley Road to the post office, a redesign of the Pleasant Street/Ripley Road/Depot Court intersection, a more defined sidewalk along Elm Street, and the St. Stephen's sidewalk project [see related story].

However, they did not fully support the Depot Court plan, which would create angled parking by the South Shore Community Center, but force the removal of the island from the middle of the street. O'Connor said the P.O.W. Memorial could instead be moved to a "mini-park" created on the corner of North Main Street and Depot Court.

Selectman Michael Sullivan thought removing the island would result in drivers cutting the corner when turning onto Depot Court from the village.

But he was in the minority. Selectman Merle Brown said the reconfiguration would be safer for parents dropping off their children at the community center.

Selectman Thomas Callahan didn't see why the town should keep the island just to "accommodate bad drivers."

The VRTF's plan for a redesigned town parking lot had already been some-what approved — it was submitted to the MBTA as part of the mitigation agreement the town signed in May. The MBTA will pick up the cost for reconstructing the parking lot.

The board also said work on the parking lot would be done in conjunction with any work done on restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line, and the last phase of the James Brook Flood Control project, which the MBTA has agreed to pay for also.

Additionally, at the request of selectmen, the task force presented a preliminary cost estimate of the improvements, broken into different phases, and by sidewalk materials. The estimated costs, not including money for contingencies and full-design plans, ranged from $1.7 million if done with concrete sidewalks to $2.4 million if done with brick.

Funding for the project could be a mixed blessing, however.

If restoration of the Greenbush line does happen, and recent developments suggest it will [see related story], the town would see a windfall of money. A combination of the MBTA-backed $1.5 million Public Works Economic Development grant for the downtown area, MBTA-funded reconstruction of the parking lot, the existing $170,000 MassHighway grant for the St. Stephen's walkway, and private donations could cover the entire cost of the project.

But if the train is scrapped, which many hope it will, the town is left with the task of figuring out a funding source.

Even if the project does not require any town money to be spent, selectmen will still require the plan to pass a Town Meeting vote.

Rizzo said he hopes to hold one more public forum after the task force has met with a few more various town groups. "The goal is to get enough input prior to presenting it at Town Meeting, that we have already basically reached a consensus," he said.

St. Stephen's sidewalk gets go-ahead

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Three years after it was passed at Town Meeting, Selectmen gave the go-ahead Tuesday for the St. Stephen's sidewalk project in the village.

The project, which will remove up to four feet of granite ledge and build a sidewalk connecting Elm Street and Cohasset Common along South Main Street, has already been awarded a $170,000 grant from MassHighway, and has just been awaiting design plans by the town.

Last night, during a presentation by the Village Revitalization Task Force — which has been working closely with the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private, non-profit group consisting of town residents and business interests dedicated to improving the village and harbor areas — the board voted to finally get the project moving.

The task force had presented a set of plans created by their urban design firm, The Cecil Group, in the past, but both selectmen and residents were concerned the sidewalk would further narrow an already tight road.

"There had always been some controversy about removing the ledge and blasting and safety of cars driving up on the sidewalk, and as much as selectmen understand those concerns, we've decided to prioritize safety," said Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed. "I don't know if there is anybody in town who hasn't gone over the white line to avoid traffic the way it's currently configured. But we reached a point where we had to make a decision and the grant money is there to do it."

At the request of the board last month, the CRC marked off where the proposed curb line would be, and it turned out to be between a foot and two feet away from the existing fog line – much to the surprise of selectmen.

Selectman Thomas Callahan suggested last night that the task force has enough space to work with, that it should consider moving the curb out a bit, thus not having to chip away as much ledge.

CRC Executive Director Dean Rizzo said he would commission a formal set of sidewalk plans to be created, and would then present them to the task force and selectmen before sending them into the state.

The sidewalk's building material was not decided at last night's meeting. The task force has narrowed the options down to brick, blue-stone border, and concrete, and will seek an opinion from the public.

Cecil Group representative David O'Connor was not exactly sure how the ledge would be removed. Rizzo said it would more than likely be removed by inserting water into the ledge, letting it freeze and expand during the winter, allowing it to crack naturally.

Memorial planned at Mariners Park

Plans are underway to install a memorial at Mariners Park [formerly the Hagerty site] off Parker Avenue for those from Cohasset who lost their lives at sea.

If anyone has any additional names, please contact Paul Pattison at 781-383-6164.

These are the names that organizers have so far: Eagle McSweeny, Bill Grassie, Tony Figueiredo, Richard Figueiredo, Joe Figueiredo, Mary Figueiredo, Mickey Figueiredo, Pater Grimes, Samantha Hutt, Sheldon Sladen, Robin Lagemann, Jack Hubbard, Harold Hill, Jack Curtis, Paul Dion and Charles Wasser.

Town Meeting to vote on name

Selectmen decided Tuesday to file a special Town Meeting article that would name the new town parking lot and dock at the end of Parker Avenue, "Mariners Park," in memory of those who have lost their lives at sea.

The name was proposed by Hagerty Property Committee member Paul Pattison, and has received near unanimous support according to Town Manager Mark Haddad and committee chairman Russ Bonetti.

Haddad said since the dock's gangway wouldn't arrive until the end of the boating season, he recommended delaying the dedication until next year.

However, Bonetti was upset at the board's decision to put naming the park before a Town Meeting vote, and to not dedicate the park until the spring.

"You should just make a decision and get it over with," he said. "You've made a lot more important decisions with less consideration."

Selectman Michael Sullivan, who pushed to allow Town Meeting to vote on the name, said he didn't see the big deal waiting.

"Town Meeting bought it and I think we should let them name it," he said.

Local Vietnam vet pushes to get memorial finished

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

What started out as an effort to honor all town veterans has turned into a battle that has lasted longer than most wars.

To Joe McElroy, a retired US Army lieutenant colonel — who circulated a petition over the weekend to jump start the veterans memorial project at the harbor — that's just not right.

"The bottom line is the project ought to be moved forward," the Windy Hill Road resident said.

But World War II veteran Austin "Bud" Ahearn, who is spearheading the project, says the granite has been ordered and should arrive in about two weeks. Once it arrives, Ahearn will put the project out to bid. The WWII memorial will be finished, and the WWI and Spanish-American memorials will go up at the same time, he said.

However, McElroy, a Vietnam War veteran, said he won't hold his breath. Ahearn has promised progress on the memorials before and nothing has been done, he said. McElroy is also not satisfied with Town Hall's seemingly laid-back approach. Although selectmen threatened to take over the project 14 months ago, at a recent meeting, they said they had no leverage because the project does not involve a town committee or town funds. But the memorial is on town land, McElroy points out.

"It's like the world stopped spinning after V-J day – when since that time, 50,000-plus American soldiers died in Korea and 50,000-plus in Vietnam."
— Joe McElroy, Windy Hill Road

Back in 1992, Ahearn, who lives on Clay Spring Road, launched the non-profit Cohasset Military Memorial, Inc. to raise money for a memorial, which was to be built in phases, that would include the names of Cohasset veterans of all wars.

Ahearn built the first phase, the WWII memorial, but excluded names of those who served in the occupational forces from V-J Day, Aug. 14, 1945, until Dec. 31, 1946, even though the US Congress also considers those soldiers veterans.

The exclusion set off a firestorm of controversy among veterans that landed in the selectmen's lap. Not long thereafter, McElroy served on a committee appointed to mitigate the issue and get the project back on track.

"We came up with recommendations on how to proceed," McElroy recalled. "But the committee never had in its mission to execute the project."

Execution, however, appears to be under the sole jurisdiction of Ahearn, a combat veteran whose memories of serving with the 9th Army in Europe are as vivid today as they were more than 55 years ago. Ahearn has made no secret of the fact that he doesn't consider the occupational forces true war veterans because they could not have heard a shot fired in anger.

To date, neither the wording on the memorial to include all World War II veterans has not been changed nor have the missing names been added.

What has rankled McElroy even more was Ahearn's effort to solicit more funds last year for the WWI and Spanish-American War honor rolls – when the WWII memorial remained uncorrected.

Ahearn has reported total contributions of upwards of $25,000 for the memorials. He explained much of the delay was due to compiling names of the occupational forces and uncovering names of soldiers inadvertently left off the WWII memorial – efforts that were extremely time consuming.

McElroy recently wrote to the Division of Public Charities, state Office of the Attorney General, to complain about the project's lack of progress and asking that the money be expended on the memorial by Veterans Day, Nov. 11 of this year [see related story].

In a telephone interview, McElroy said many Korean and Vietnam veterans contributed to the project with the idea that their memorials would soon come to fruition. He pointed out Korean veterans, who are only five years younger than WWII veterans for the most part, are getting up there in years.

"It's like [for Ahearn] the world stopped spinning after V-J day – when since that time, 50,000-plus American soldiers died in Korea and 50,000-plus in Vietnam.

"It's as if in those wars, people who died and served, never existed," he said.

Ahearn said there won't be enough money to build the remaining Vietnam, Korea and Desert Storm memorials because his fund-raising effort last year only brought in about $5,000 in additional money.

"There won't be enough money to finish the project," he said. "If someone else wants to do it, that's fine. I'm 81."

Charitable organization hasn't filed with state

In answering a written inquiry by Joe McElroy of Windy Hill Road regarding Cohasset Military Memorial Corporation, the state Attorney General's Office stated the organization has not complied with state law governing public charities.

Sandra L. Cardone, assistant attorney general, wrote public charities are required to register with the Division of Public Charities before engaging in solicitations for funds and are also required to report annually to the Division – neither of which the Cohasset Military Memorial Corp. has done.

"While I do have reason to believe the entity is a 501 c3 tax exempt organization, it, nonetheless, must still must register and file with the Attorney General's Office," stated Cardone, who said she would notify the organization of its legal responsibilities.

Richard Leggat of Jerusalem Road, an attorney who is a director of the military memorial corporation, stated in a letter to the Attorney General's office that Cohasset Military Memorial Inc. is qualified as a 501 c3 corporation by the Internal Revenue Service. In a telephone interview, Leggat said the organization is manned by volunteers and Ahearn has done most of the work on the memorial himself.

"If there was some failure on the filings, it is not a big deal," he said. But Leggat said he planned to call the Attorney General's office and get the matter straightened out.

"This is a tempest in a teapot," he said.

Lambert's Lane speed patrols

A recent Norfolk County Board of Engineers traffic study of Lambert's Lane showed the average vehicle speed to be approximately 20 miles per hour, close to a similar study done by Cohasset Police.

Residents had appeared before selectmen to complain about speeding traffic along the road leading to the Cohasset Golf Club.

If the town was to change the speed limit on the private way, which is currently 15 miles per hour, it would have to be set at the 85th percentile in terms of average speed – in this case, 25 miles per hour.

"The road does have some cars that travel 40 miles per hour, but we have that on every street," said Town Manager Mark Haddad."

The board has asked police to step up patrols along the road, and asked the golf club to remind their visitors to observe the posted speed limit.

Not all are aboard on Greenbush decision

Plymouth and Middleboro lines were restored and up and running in 1997.)

He said ridership studies "show that at best, the boat alternatives achieve just-over one-half the ridership levels of the rail alternatives."

Durand also pointed out that the project is identified as an element of the State Implementation Plan under the federal Clean Air Act, and is also legally required as air quality mitigation for the Big Dig project.

However, Bewick, who said he has been reviewing environmental impact reports since 1970, called the Greenbush report "one of the most damaging and biased" reports he has seen. He said the MBTA underestimated boat ridership numbers, "loaded" the cost of constructing a commuter boat dock in Scituate, and "ignored" the damaging impact diesel particulates will have locally.

"The EIR is nothing more than an advocates brief in which the MBTA distorted the alternatives to make the train succeed," said Bewick.

He said the MBTA has a "tunnel" mentality, and is in the business to build and run trains, not boats.

Bewick was also concerned of the impact the project would have on wetlands and watershed areas along the line. He said AfTA consultants found 10 more vernal pools than were identified by the MBTA.

Wetlands variance

Durand did acknowledge that the project will require a variance from the Wetlands Protection Act regulations, which will require further study of impact on wildlife and rare species, and storm-water management.

But overall, Bewick said he wasn't surprised at the decision.

"Durand is just following the administration — he more or less has to," he said. "You're either part of the team of you're not."

However, Durand's office denied that the decision was rubber-stamped.

"The MBTA has complied with the laws of Massachusetts, and if somebody's going to challenge that, they're going to challenge it," said Doug Pizzi, spokesman for the office of environmental affairs. "The fact it's a state agency has nothing to do whether it gets approved or not."

MBTA deputy general manager Michael Mulhern said he was confident the MBTA's data would hold up under any scrutiny.

"We appreciate the concerns of local residents, and will work hard to allay those concerns," he said. "But we believe we have a strong legal basis to move forward and fulfill what is a legal required part of the Big Dig.

Scot Yount of NECN interviews John Bewick, president of AfTA and Greenbush opponent, on Central Street in Hingham Square on Monday evening.

"We'd much prefer not to have to debate the issue in court, but nonetheless are totally confident of the outcome, and will still move forward."

Greenbush Citizens Advisory Committee member Martha Gjesteby, who was part of the group's minority that supported the EIR, was pleased with Durand's decision.

"I can't wait to ride the train," the Old Pasture Road resident said.

Bewick said he will seek an injunction on the project, and has retained the services of Cambridge-based law firm Anderson & Kreiger, which specializes in dealing with MEPA lawsuits. The firm recently helped defeat a proposed sludge facility in Walpole and a prison in New Braintree.

"What we want is a fair comparison, to get a judicial review," Bewick said. "We have no doubt that when there is a fair analysis, alternatives to the train would be superior."

As Bewick and AfTA get ready to take on Durand and the EIR, the MBTA is getting ready to build a train.

Mulhern said the MBTA has "pre-qualified" four firms, based on size and expertise, who could complete the project by 2005. Originally, project bids were due in by Sept. 28, but Mulhern said firms have asked for more time.

He said the MBTA will also work on finishing the technical components of the project, such as the Scituate layover station and Weymouth Landing grade crossing as outlined in Durand's certificate, as well as "actively pursuing" lower diesel emissions standards.

Terry Fancher, who served on the Greenbush Citizens Advisory Committee appointed by Durand to study the EIR, was part of the minority opinion in support of the report. He complimented Durand's directives surrounding the Scituate layover station and Weymouth Landing grade-crossing, as well as the diesel emissions reduction pilot program.

"It's a very clean report, and everything in there is reasonable," he said. "Diesel-rail service has a proven ability to move people in and out of Boston, and I duly expect that to happen with Greenbush."

Neither state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, nor state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, both of whom are anti-train, were surprised by Durand's decision.

"He had to if he wanted to avoid walking into the next Governor's meeting and being a pariah," said Hedlund.

Bradley said the last three governors over the past 11 years have all affirmed their desire to see the Greenbush line restored, "and there hasn't been one voice from the administration in opposition."

Bolster looks to the future

It's still hoped that Nick Bolster will be able to end his outstanding athletic career at C.H.S. on the hardwood this winter and on the baseball diamond this spring.

Still recovering from eye surgery, Cohasset High star to sit out football season

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

A talented pitcher is unable to complete the baseball season after an injury to his eye. This is not the tale of former Red Sox reliever Bryce Florie, but the sad story of a Cohasset High School senior-to-be, Nick Bolster.

Last May, Bolster underwent two surgeries for his detached retina just a few weeks into his junior baseball season. Recuperating right on schedule over the summer, Bolster was looking forward a season of football, where he was tabbed to be the starting halfback and captain for the Skippers.

Last week, however, he got the call from his surgeon— Mackenzie Freeman, of Cohasset—informing Nick that this fall would be a lost cause.

"The impact of playing football would definitely be too much at this point in the surgeries," explained Bolster, noting that a mere hit to the head could cause a relapse of the tear in his eye.

The malady hit Bolster mysteriously at the beginning of the spring, when his vision started "getting hazy." He could not, however, think of a single incident where he might have scratched his eye.

His doctors have offered the theory that this condition is genetic, as Bolster's uncle had a full tear in his retina.

Genetically started or not, the only keys to the healing process are monthly check-ups and, more importantly, time.

"It's frustrating," began Bolster, "that there is nothing I did to make it happen, and there is nothing I can do to make it better."

It is possible that Bolster will undergo another surgery this September, but neither he nor his surgeon can be sure of what will and what will not be necessary in a month.

Although it was disappointing to have it confirmed, Bolster knew right from the time he had his surgery that football might not be in the cards for his senior year.

> "The impact of playing football would definitely be too much at this point in the surgeries."
> Nick Bolster

"Initially, they said I couldn't play any more contact sports," reported the three sport athlete. "They even said that I couldn't lift weights for two months because the strain would be too much."

This fall, Bolster's talent on the field will definitely be missed. He led the team in receptions and interceptions, and also became one of the top punt and kick returners in the South Shore League. Bolster still intends to contribute what he can to the team.

"I am still a captain, so I am going to be around helping out," said Bolster.

Bolster will try to stay active this fall, hoping to pitch every Sunday for a local fall baseball team.

He still does not know if he will be able to play basketball this winter for C.H.S., or even baseball in the spring. If he cannot clear it with Doctor Freeman, he may opt for track and field in the winter.

"What [Freeman] says goes," affirmed Bolster. "If he says no, then I don't play."

Last winter, Bolster was a big spark off the bench for the basketball Skippers, providing great rebounding and a strong inside presence.

For the baseball team, he was the number one starter, and one of the top hitters for the team, batting out of the three-hole and putting up All-Star type numbers.

For Bolster, missing baseball would probably be the hardest one to take, especially since he had the talent to possibly play in college. As of right now, Bolster is looking to apply to Boston College. Should he be accepted, he will try to make the team as a walk on.

"It is going to be tough, but I would love to go there," said Bolster.

Unfortunately, he notes, this injury has pretty much knocked him out of the running for any sort of baseball

Cohasset's Dennis Reardon (second from right) was a huge contributor to the U.S. Zonal championship tennis team, playing third singles for the team of top players from all over New England (pictured here). The members of the team were (L-R) Scott Denenberg (Trumbull, Conn.), Mark Santucci (Capachet, RI), Zachary Kurz (Westport, Conn.), Coach Nigel Griffith, Reardon and Andrew Singer (Wakefield, RI).

Reardon helps net Zonal crown

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Dennis Reardon just finished off the most competitive tournament of his young career with a team win at the Zonal Competition in St. Louis, Mo. last week.

The 16-year old Cohasset resident has been playing in many tournaments over the past few years, and his outstanding performances and steady improvement led him to a tournament in New Haven, Conn.

In this tourney, he needed to finish in the top 14 to move up to the Zonal team. He wound up placing in the top 10. This collection of 10 males who went to Zonals split into two teams, and headed down to St. Louis to go against other teams of five from all over the United States.

For six straight days in temperatures that were over 100 degrees, Reardon totaled a very solid three wins for his team at third singles. The wins were very impressive, especially since he had to struggle with a shoulder injury in addition to the oppressive heat.

Andrew Singer of Wakefield, RI won all five of his matches to lead the team to victory at the number one spot. Mark Santucci, a native of Chepachet, RI also went undefeated at the second singles position.

The other members of the team who were great contributors to the win were Scott Denenberg of Trumble, Conn., and Zachury Kurz, of Westport, Conn..

The other New England team went into the tournament looking just as impressive as their counterparts. However, their chances faded fast when two of their five players were rushed to the hospital due to dehydration.

One left on a stretcher, while the other left the courts under his own power. The unfortunate events demoralized Reardon and his team, but coach Nigel Griffith, a pro for the Sportsman's Tennis Club in Mattapan, had his players drinking a half gallon of Gatorade for every match in which they played in addition to an electrolyte supplement.

Oddly enough, the two young men were taken into medical treatment on the same tragic day that Korey Stringer of the Minnesota Vikings died in preseason training due to heat stroke.

The boys of the winning team will have a story written on them for the United States Tennis Magazine.

Even though Reardon finished up a fantastic undefeated season at fourth singles for Milton Academy, and is receiving many accolades for his recent tournament performances, he still remains a humble team-oriented player.

"I played on a great team," he said recently. "There are a lot of talented players on that team and they all deserve a lot of credit. The team comes first with me."

See ya, Jimy and Terry

One of the truly enticing draws of professional sports is the license it grants us all to say pretty much whatever we feel. What more proof do we need of this assertion than the outrageous success of sports talk radio?

With youth, high school and other amateur sports, of course, discretion is always the better part of valor. Despite the poor examples we sometimes observe or hear about, civility and sensitivity are of the utmost. Anyone who doesn't realize this, shouldn't be allowed anywhere near these events.

Scituate's over-55 softball league draws big numbers

By Jim Logan
CORRESPONDENT

At this time last year, Scituate resident Jim Hyde and his newfound band of merry men (i.e., the eleven or so respondees to ads placed in South Shore newspapers, looking to recruit area residents for Hyde's dream of a local Over-55 softball league), were playing Sunday and Wednesday morning pickup games at Scituate's Gates school, recycling the same publications that first beckoned the "Diamond Dozen" out to play ball— transforming the weekly's into official league bases.

Well, a year later— while the same twelve are still heading out every Sunday and Wednesday, still trotting around the diamond and, still playing pickup contests— that's about the only semblance to last summer's endeavor which has still remained.

Everything else? Well that was 365 days ago.

Now?

Now…well let's just say it's a whole new ballgame these days.

"We're growing up," laughs Hyde, referring to the rapid changes his brainstorm "senior circuit" softball club has witnessed in but a season's span.

"At this time last year, we were a couple of guys grabbing whatever we could use to [act as] our first, second, third, and home plate, meeting as regularly as we could. Now, we've got the real things out there (bases), and we're there playing without fail every week. It might not seem like much, but a lot has already gone on since we first started this thing up."

"A lot" is an understatement. In the twelve months since initially pitching his idea to Director Joan Wright and Coordinator Mary Dean of the Scituate Council on Aging (C.O.A.), Hyde has seen his "baby" thrive into a nearly 70-member club- complete with hats and jerseys for each player; a far cry from the 12 people playing in street clothes in 2000.

"We had each guy pitch in a couple of bucks apiece, and got a sort of a uniform to have on when we're out there playing," says Hyde. "We're actually starting to look like a real league!"

Wright agrees. While both she and the entire C.O.A. thought the formation of a regional over-55 softball league would be good for the area— considering the closest semblance to anything like it was an hour's ride away on the Cape— no one ever expected things to catch fire like it did.

"We never anticipated this growing so fast, and so much," Wright says. "I think it illustrates just how active a lot of the senior population is around here. Too many times, when people see or hear the words 'senior citizen', they tend to think it's a term used to describe someone who's coming towards the end of their lives. I disagree. I think in fact it's just the opposite; I think for many, it's just the beginning."

One person who wholeheartedly concurs with this assessment is 80-year Frank Murano of Weymouth, the Over-55 league's "elder spokesman".

Does Murano feel he's closing in on the twilight of his career?

"Forget about that coming to the end stuff," insists Murano, who to this day gets out and walks 2-3 miles each morning, in addition to his softball adventures on Wednesday and Sunday over at the Gates School. The spry "young buck", also travels to numerous U.S. cities like Baltimore and L.A., where the former '43 Red Sox tryout competes in several seniors' tournaments nationally.

"Age? Hell, your age has nothing to do with things, so long as you just keep moving!" said Murano. "It's when you stop, that's when you need to start worrying. And I'm not just saying that either, see? That's the truth. It's when you feel like you gotta slow down and you do; that's when it's over."

Murano continues. "That's why I stay active. And going down to Scituate every Wednesday and Sunday to play ball, in addition to all the other things I got going on— with the other teams I play for and family— has been great for me. A [league] like this around here in the South Shore area has been needed for a while now. I'm having fun."

Another local who feels that organized ball like this for seniors has been long overdue, and is tickled about something finally getting done, is 67-year old Marshfield resident Bob "Murph" Murphy. Murphy states, he's been waiting for years to again have the opportunity and finally get back in competitive action, and to do so close to home.

For him, it's been a perfect chance to rekindle an old flame.

"I saw Jimmy Hyde's car parked one day, and there was this flyer on it, telling people to come out to Scituate and play ball on Wednesdays and Sundays," Murphy recalls. "He and I got to talking for a bit, and before I knew it I was at the park taking grounders. For me, I was real excited to be out there, and have been every week since. Before this league came along, it'd been close to 35 years since I last played ball at this kind of [spirited] level. This has been great. I wish we could keep playing all year long!"

Praises like Murphy's, Hyde states, have been commonplace when it comes to talking about the Scituate senior softball league. The response, as depicted by the staggering increase in attendance in just over one season, proves what in fact Hyde tells he knew along.

If it's built they will come.

And stepping out from the youthful cornfields, they're coming in droves.

"I realistically see us turning into a six or eight team league within a year or two, the way it's been going until now," offered Hyde. At present, the over-55 league still retains a 'sandlot' atmosphere, drawing informal squads via "ones" and "twos" from the roster that assembles each week.

"We are growing," Hyde jokes. "We just haven't grown that big; not just yet!"

So just how large will this dream of Jim Hyde's get? That remains to be seen. But if one can make predictions based on past performance, then a safe bet would be the Scituate over-55 softball league will continue to sprout.

The word is out: there's plenty of fun times and camaraderie to be had down at the 'ol ballyard these days, and just enough grind 'em out play to kick the competitive juices back into overdrive.

So if you happen to find yourself with a couple of spare moments this Sunday morning, you might just want to take a drive on over to the Gates School and take in a game.

The other word floating around on the streets is you won't be disappointed.

"People, and I really mean this, would be pretty surprised if they were to go down to the park and watch the guys play," Wright says. "There's an awful lot of talent out there on that field, and you also get to watch a lot of guys just having a lot of fun. I've gone down myself several times and, I can honestly say I've seen some terrific games."

"I'm always telling people I know from around here, they should come by [Gates] park on a Sunday morning and see things," says 57-year old Peter Andrew of Duxbury. "They'll really have a good time and enjoy themselves. It's just about a bunch of us guys making new friends, having a lot of laughs and playing ball. I think it's definitely worth the trip."

Judging by the numbers, it's pretty obvious to see Andrew's words are not alone.

Coby's Run set for Aug. 26

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

A field of 600-625 runners is expected for the Sixth Annual Coby's Run on Aug. 26 beginning at the Gates Intermediate School. The 10K and 5K races get underway at 9am. A 1K children's race for those 10 and under starts at 8:30 am.

The morning of races are held in the memory of Coby Cutler. Cutler, a 1995 graduate of Scituate High, died on Aug. 23, 1995 after being struck by lightning while directing his squad through an early-morning rifle-range session during marine basic training at Parris Island, SC. Four members of Cutler's squad were injured by the lightning.

Coby Cutler

"He wanted to be a marine since he was 4 or 5," said Coby's mother, Quincie-Ann "Q" Cutler, who serves as co-race director with her husband, Rick Cutler. "Race day is emotional for us because it's held the same time of year Coby was killed. We've met so many wonderful people through the race. We try to pull that out of the day."

Since the race's inception, more than $95,000 has been raised for the construction of a fitness center at the high school. This year's race should put the amount over $100,000 and will coincide with the $27 million renovation project earmarked for the high school.

Quincie-Ann said athletic director Kathleen Stewart has been a big supporter of the new fitness center. Rick, Quincie-Ann and Stewart will be visiting several different schools which have new fitness centers.

"She's absolutely fabulous," said Quincie-Ann of Stewart. "She's been really terrific."

During his senior year, Coby spent hours in the high school weight room in preparation for basic training and also ran several times per week. Several marines have participated in the race in past years and are expected again this year.

The 10K (6.2 miles) race follows a course to the waterfront and along Scituate Harbor. Both the 10 and 5K events head up the steep, Beaver Dam Road hill in the final half mile. Awards will be presented in several age groups, including a 14-and-under division that was added last year.

"We have a lot of kids like who want to run the race," Quincie-Ann said. "They do a good job."

Richard Peels of Plymouth bested the 269-runner 10K field last year in 34:10. Donna Mare of Silver Spring, MD was the women's winner in 37:50. There were 104 finishers in the 5K race, which was won by Rusty Dolleman of West Davis, ME in 17:15. Marshfield's Lucy Canavan claimed the women's title in 20:09.

Water will be available during the race, as well as post-race refreshments including juice, soda, fruit, granola bars and yogurt.

The entry fee, which has stayed the same since the inaugural race in 1995, is $12. T-shirts guaranteed to first 300 pre-registered.

Awards will be given to top three men and top three women in 10K and 5K runs. Each fun run participant will receive a ribbon and a T-shirt.

The race will start at 9 a.m. at Gates Intermediate School, Scituate Common. The fun run for age 10 and under will start at 8:30 a.m.

Check in Saturday, Aug. 25, from 9 a.m. to noon at Gates Intermediate School or race day beginning at 7:30 a.m.

Weymouth Club cuts ribbon on new facilities

by Art Dunphy
SPECIAL TO COMMUNITY NEWSPAPERS

Weymouth Club owners Steve and Sally Goldman were joined by Mayor David Madden of Weymouth August 14, for the official opening of Weymouth Club's new Tennis and Aquatics Centers located adjacent to the Club's existing facilities on Finnell Drive in South Weymouth.

With more than 3,500 members and 6,000 active participants, Weymouth Club is the largest and most successful multi-purpose fitness and athletic club south of Boston.

With the addition of the six new all-weather courts, Weymouth Club becomes the largest tennis facility of its type in New England with 17 indoor/outdoor tennis courts.

The new Aquatics Center speaks to the Club's increased commitment to aquatics programs and includes a 25-meter, eight-lane pool, a warm-water exercise pool, a children's water park, and a new Jacuzzi.

Eight-five new parking spaces have also been added to accommodate the expanded facilities.

With the completion of Phase I construction, Weymouth Club will now move ahead with Phase II of its current $5-million expansion project this fall.

Included in the next phase of construction are a new Tennis Center Clubhouse, that will house additional locker rooms, a pro shop, and reception area, and a new Aquatics Center connector, that will include new locker rooms and parent-child changing rooms.

Also planned, but not yet scheduled for construction, are a full-size indoor gymnasium for basketball, volleyball, gymnastics and other team sports; expanded fitness and group exercise studios; and a new children's center with computer rooms, arts & crafts rooms, indoor recreation space, and expanded day-care services.

In 1988 the Goldmans, who live in Milton, purchased what was then the Weymouth Tennis Club and were quick to recognize the need to offer more than just tennis if their Club was to grow and prosper.

"Tennis-only had its limits," said Steve Goldman. "Sally and I felt there was a much broader market on the South Shore and in order to be a major player it would require taking the risk to think differently. Reinvestment is the key. You can't rest on your laurels and expect to remain competitive."

One needs only to observe the Goldmans' continuous expansion and upgrading of their Finnell Drive complex over the past 13 years to fully appreciate their management philosophy in action.

right therapeutic.

Case in point: I have no qualms in freely admitting that I reacted with satisfaction last week to both the firing of Red Sox Manager Jimy Williams and the season-long suspension of Patriot man-child Terry Glenn.

I won't bore you with more background (indeed, can there by anyone out there reading a sports column who doesn't know the pertinent details?) or even my full explanations for these reasonings. Way too much newsprint has already been devoted to these matters, in my opinion. Any shot I might have had at creating a little thunder was swiped days before this deadline.

Still, I do feel the need to put my money where my keyboard is and offer a brief unmitigated blast of my straight off the cuff impressions.

Sometimes spectacular, more often invisible, the only consistent trait Terry Glenn has displayed in his five years of service to the Patriots is a high level of self-absorption. His seemingly unshakable lack of commitment to anything beyond his own interests has long flown in the face of everything being a "true team members" should be about.

Unity of purpose and commitment are essential building blocks for any team. And it is not impossible for one individual to devastate that pursuit. This is particularly true in football — the ultimate team sport, in my opinion — where the strength of spirit in rallying around the common cause is often the difference between whether a player even makes it on to the field.

For Patriots head coach Bill Belichick, delivering the harshest sanction he could on Terry Glenn became the only sensible course of action. Sure, he cost the team its most physically talented player for at least 20 games, but it's not that much of a stretch to say that in so doing he made each of his remaining 53 players just a little bit better. In short, this team will not only compensate for the loss of Glenn, it'll be better for it.

One final possible benefit to the full-season suspension: Glenn is almost assuredly going to emerge a stronger or weaker person for this. If, over the next 14 months of hanging around trying to figure out how his life got so messed up, Glenn happens to finally look in the mirror, a long-awaited realization of his potential may still be a possibility. If, however, he continues to play the blame game with chief agent/enabler Jim Gould, he'll emerge a weaker player and, it says here, will never play a full season in the NFL again.

As for Jimy, I'm so sick of his legion of supporters insistence on pointing only to what they perceive as "the bottom line." To a man, woman and child, they all reason that the Sox overachieved during Jimbo's five-year tenure, and make the conjecture from this conjecture that he must have done a good job.

Based on this reasoning, would these same people say Adolf Hitler, with East Germany's economy soaring during his term of office, did a great job?

OK, perhaps I'm being a bit extreme.

But be honest Red Sox fans: how many times over the last few seasons have you been left scratching your head over Jimy's moves or non-moves? I know it was almost a weekly occurrence where I was concerned. I still have relatively vivid recollections of the Zimmer, Houk, McNamara, Hobson and Kennedy regimes, and I honestly don't remember ever before being left so often confused.

This is not to say we should expect to always be on the same page with a manager. We should, after all, assume he knows the game better than us and that he knows the capabilities of his players much better than us.

Of course, it would be nice if reporters — who, I think at least in this regard, were representing our collective curiosity — were allowed to seek an explanation without being ignored or disparaged (remember the "What Little League team do you manage" retort?). These kinds of defensive reactions only strengthened the supposition that Jimy wasn't secure in his own convictions— a shortcoming that would be high on anyone's list of qualities NOT desired in a manager.

But I'm not gonna go there.

How well Jimy did or didn't do as a manager doesn't even factor into my support of the decision to replace him with Joe Kerrigan. In fact, I'm not even really considering anything that took place prior to the firing.

The only question I ask is this: Are the Red Sox a better team without him right NOW? In my mind, the answer is a resounding "Yes".

Even many of his diehard supporters will concede that Jimy had lost the ear of several of his players, thereby creating an untenable situation. Of course, most of them will lay the blame for this at the feet of the players, and I'd probably be willing to lean that way as well.

Bottom line: something had to give, and since you can't fire 25, or 10, five or (often) even one player as easily as you can a manager… sorry, Jimy, but that's the nature of the beast we pro sports fans have helped create and on the back of which you've grown rich.

Ah, that felt good, good enough to keep me smiling through another couple of Little League games anyway.

Open house and sign-up for our gymnastics program will be Aug. 29 from 6-8 p.m. in the gym.

Spanish immersion at Horizons daycare

The Bright Horizons Child Development Center in Hingham will offer a new, optional program for its preschoolers this fall — a full-immersion Spanish language program for English-speaking children. Children at least 30-months-old and up to age five may enroll in the program.

Full immersion means that the center's current curriculum will be taught in Spanish. Everything in the classroom will be in Spanish — books, posters and games — and the teacher will speak only Spanish. Children will continue learning English from their parents.

Full immersion is the most efficient way to learn a new language," explains Jim Greenman. "We know it works because it is the way most of the world becomes bilingual — simply by going about life in multilingual societies. And Bright Horizons has experience with immersion programs because of the number of children who enter our care that do not speak English."

Rosano pleads guilty to drug counts

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Howe Road resident Joseph Rosano pleaded guilty to two counts of drug possession with intent to distribute, following a three-year investigation of his drug activities by Cohasset Police and the Norfolk County District Attorney's Drug Task Force.

Rosano was arrested in April after Cohasset and Massachusetts State Police executed a search warrant at his home, and seized approximately half a pound of marijuana, a triple beam scale, more than three boxes of financial records, and cash, according to court records.

According to court records obtained by the Mariner, Cohasset Det. Gregory Lennon began investigating marijuana distribution activity involving Rosano in the spring of 1998. Using two confidential informants, police made four controlled marijuana purchases from Rosano, known as "Joal," either at his home or in an agreed-upon location, between January of 1999 and Rosano's April arrest.

> "We knew from the outset of the case that from the amount of marijuana we confiscated, that this would be the normal conclusion,."
> — Police Chief Brian Noonan

Cohasset police contended in the documents that Rosano had been "engaged in an ongoing, organized and disciplined conspiracy" to distribute marijuana in both Norfolk and Plymouth counties "for a significant period of time."

Rosano initially pleaded not guilty, but changed his plea on Aug. 8. The case was continued without a finding for 18 months, but Rosano will have to forfeit the $511 turned up in the search to the Norfolk County District Attorney's Office, and submit to random drug tests.

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan said, although Rosano will serve no jail time, provided he stays arrest-free for 18 months, he was satisfied with the case result.

"We knew from the outset of the case that from the amount of marijuana we confiscated, that this would be the normal conclusion," he said.

Besides marijuana, the April 18 search also turned up .38 and .22 caliber revolvers, a .22 Derringer, a Crossman BB gun, .22 caliber rifle, Ithaca double barrel shotgun, a .22 caliber Winchester rifle with scope, and assorted ammunition. Noonan said Rosano did have a permit to own the guns.

Police also found Cohasset and Duxbury police badges. Noonan said Rosano was a part-time officer in Cohasset back in the mid-'60s, and was a full-time police officer in Duxbury.

Fusion at the Abbey

Hingham Symphony Orchestra tunes up for outdoor jazz-classical concert August 25

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

What could be better than spending a summer night outside listening to the smooth sounds of classical music and jazz? The answer?— Making that concept a reality.

This Saturday (Aug. 25), beginning at 4:30 p.m. at Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham, the Hingham Symphony Orchestra (HSO) will be sponsoring its second "Sunset at the Abbey" concert.

"Last year's themes were Celtic and classical music, but this year we're doing jazz and classical," said HSO managing director Nina Wellford. "The Abbey is just a beautiful outdoor amphitheater, and it's the perfect place for an end-of-the-summer concert. Last year, the weather was gorgeous. This year, we're hoping for the same."

This year's Abbey concert will feature the jazz-based Ed Sorrentino Trio, as well as the classical sounds of HSO oboist Andrew Price, HSO harpist Alicia Jones, and accomplished opera singer Mara Bonde. There will be different sets for the classical and jazz music, but interestingly enough, Bonde will be singing with both groups throughout the evening.

"At the Hingham Symphony Orchestra, music is universal," Wellford said. "The reason we like putting on the concert at the Abbey is that it's interesting and fun to put two styles of music together to see what happens, and to feature these local musicians."

"People who come for the jazz are going to find that classical music is way more accessible than they think. And people who come for the classical will just have a lot of fun with the jazz."

The performers themselves are also anticipating an enjoyable evening of great music.

"At the Hingham Symphony Orchestra, music is universal. The reason we like putting on the concert at the Abbey is that it's interesting and fun to put two styles of music together to see what happens, and to feature these local musicians."

-Hingham Symphony Orchestra managing director Nina Wellford

Wellford said she has high praise for all the musicians involved in the upcoming concert including the precision of Sorrentino's percussion skills, Bonde's illustrious voice, Price's oboe methods, and Jones' inspirational harp playing.

"I never knew what a harp could do until I watched her," Wellford said. She added Bonde has a lot of experience as a singer, and has even performed with the Boston Pops. All in all, Wellford said the public is in for a night of watching some extremely versatile musicians in a unique setting.

"By putting classical music together with jazz, we're going to make some connections," she said.

"It should really be a crowd pleaser," Price said. "The music will be very listenable and at the same time, very intriguing. I think that one of the most interesting things about the evening will be that people will be able to see some of the personalities within the orchestra (HSO). But I think the bottom line is that people will be able to hear some unabashedly beautiful music."

Sorrentino said he's looking forward to a good crowd, and he said jazz music is usually fueled by a good audience.

"Any time you have an audience that's appreciative, it really gets the band fired up," he said. "It gives us a chance to get really creative." Although the band does plan on being spontaneous, Sorrentino said he plans on playing some traditional jazz classics from greats like Benny Goodman, Cole Porter, and George Gershwin.

"We'll be playing some standard jazz, as well as some Latin-influenced music," he added. "There will be a good mixture of things in the jazz idiom."

Wellford said people will definitely enjoy the music that evening, but they will especially enjoy the atmosphere it's being played in.

"I think because the event is outdoors at the Abbey, people will find it's a very relaxing, mellow way to end the summer," she said. "It's going to be a night of fabulous music, so people should come with their friends and families. This is certainly a departure for us at the HSO, but we know we're going to have a lot of fun with it."

For more information on the "Sunset at the Abbey Concert," call (781) 740-5694. Tickets for the event cost $10 for adults and $5 for seniors and kids under 19. Tickets are available at the gate of the Abbey the day of the show or in advance at Noble's Hingham Square, Hingham Public Library, or the Abbey bookstore. In case of rain, the event will be held at the Greek Orthodox Church, 811 Jerusalem Road, Hingham.

Soprano vocalist Mara Bonde will be singing in both the jazz and classical portions of the Sunset at the Abbey concert this Saturday.

Spindles Auto Club gets ready to host its 21st annual car show in Marshfield

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

If you like cars of any sort, than you will love what will be going on at the Marshfield Fairgrounds in a couple of short weeks.

On Sept. 2, the Weymouth-based Spindles Auto Club will be hosting its 21st annual car show at the fairgrounds in which more than 600 cars of all different varieties will be featured.

What's more, the show is not being held simply for the purpose of providing amusement—a large percentage of the profits from the event will be donated to The Jimmy Fund and to the DARE organization.

"We'll have 50 different classes of cars," said 28-year Spindles member Warren Meyer, who is in charge of organizing the show each year. "We'll have antiques, street cars, trucks, four-wheel-drive vehicles, race cars, classics, you name it."

In addition to cars, there will also be live entertainment provided by the New Sensation Band (out of Plymouth), a disc jockey, and there will also be a judo exhibition. In addition, Meyer said DARE officers will be passing out stickers and pencils to kids while they explain the dangers of drugs.

A view of the Spindles car show held last year.

But the bottom line for the day will most certainly be cars. Hundreds of them.

"This show usually takes up most of the room at the fairgrounds," Meyer said. "We fill it up from one end to the other." Meyer said the amount of people that show up typically ranges anywhere from 1,000 to 10,000 individuals.

"It's well received every year," Meyer added, "and the neat thing is that we've never had a rainout." Not only is the show popular, but Meyer said in the May, 2001 issue of Rod and Custom Magazine, it was rated as "one of the greatest car shows going."

Meyer is especially proud of that statement because he was one of the founders of the event 21 years ago. During that time, the two official benefactors of the show were always DARE and The Jimmy Fund. The Spindles have raised "thousands of dollars" for both charities.

The Spindles organization has always been a charity-based group in the sense that it used to be a place where people sent kids who got in trouble.

"The club was started in 1957 by a local judge and some parents," Meyer said. "When kids would get into trouble, they would become members of the club" to keep them off the street and to learn about the discipline of driving.

As time went on, the emphasis of the club was, according to Meyer, to promote safe driving while at the same time offering a facility for automotive training and education. These days, the principal remains the same. For 21 years, the car show has been implemented with that principal in mind. It's an educational, interesting family event.

Some of the makes of the cars being shown this year include Corvettes, Camaros, Mustangs, Thunderbirds, all sorts of antique cars, and even kit cars.

"It's really an event for everyone," Meyer said. "While the adults check out the cars, there will be contests for the kids. Everyone can enjoy themselves." Meyer said to see all the cars at the show, one should be prepared to spend about four hours walking around.

"It's really a hell of a deal," Meyer said. "And it's all for a good cause."

The Spindles Auto Show is scheduled for Sept. 2 from 9 a.m.-to 4 p.m.. If it rains, the event will be held the next day at the same location. Tickets to the show cost $5. Children under 12 will get in for free. For more information, call (617) 472-3572 or log onto http://members.tripod.com/spindlescarclub/.

Antique cars will be out in full force at the Sept. 2 auto show. Pictured here a 1931 Oakland with a Hemi motor.

Powerful monster trucks are always popular at the Spindles Club Auto Show.

Fresh Fruit with Zabaglione

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

A dollop of warm zabaglione spooned over chilled, freshly picked berries is one of my favorite summer desserts. It can be prepared in minutes using just three very basic pantry items - egg yolks, sugar, and Marsala wine - but Marsala tends to overpower delicate berries. I wanted something simple but fresher in taste, a sauce that naps the berries lightly, enhancing their flavor without overpowering it.

I started with the fundamentals of zabaglione. The basic ratios are one tablespoon each of sugar and wine or liquor per yolk. (I have also seen recipes which use an eggshell as a measure – half an eggshell of sugar and Marsala per yolk.)

I found that 2 1/2 tablespoons sugar (not 4) to 4 egg yolks and 4 tablespoons Marsala was a better ratio. The ingredients are then whisked together before being placed in a double boiler where they are gently heated and whisked until the mixture is light and frothy, usually 5 minutes or so. I found that, for best results, the ingredients must be combined just before the cooking process and the zabaglione should be served immediately. Yolks whisked with sugar must not sit around before cooking as they quickly turn lumpy and even the most vigorous whisking can't rectify the situation. Finally, it was important to keep the heat low and constant. If, at any time, the zabaglione starts to curdle, simply remove the bowl from the double boiler, vigorously whisk, and then resume cooking.

Although zabaglione is usually made with Marsala, it can also be made with fortified wines such as port or liqueurs. I started my tests with dark rum, sake, Triple Sec, Cointreau, and port. The Cointreau had a nice orange flavor but was not suitable for this recipe, the port was good but heavy and more suitable for a cold weather application, the dark rum was heavy and sweet - not as good as the Marsala, the sake was odd tasting, and the Triple Sec was a faint version of the Cointreau. I also tried a variety of white and fortified wines. Pinot Grigio and Sauvignon Blanc were excellent but Chardonnay was bitter and dry vermouth was both bitter and sour. Finally, I tested champagne which was my favorite. When using white wine or champagne, however, I found that the sugar had to be brought back to 4 tablespoons since Marsala is naturally sweeter.

One last word of caution. This is an extremely simple recipe but it does not tolerate interruptions! Don't answer the phone or doorbell if you want it a silky, light zabaglione, the perfect foil for ripe summer berries.

FRESH BERRIES WITH ZABAGLIONE This recipe could not be easier and makes a great substitute for a pie or cobbler when the fruit is really fresh and flavorful. You might also try a good fruity Sancerre or a well-balanced Gewurtztraminer in place of the champagne.

3 cups berries picked over and rinsed and dried if necessary, strawberries should be sliced or quartered, and fruit divided between 6 goblets or bowls

5 large egg yolks

5 tablespoons sugar

5 tablespoons champagne or light white wine such as Pinot Grigio or Sauvignon Blanc

1. Bring 1 inch of water to a simmer in a saucepan wide enough to accommodate a large metal or tempered glass mixing bowl resting on top. Whisk the egg yolks and sugar in the bowl until light, about 2 minutes. Whisk in the champagne or white wine.

2. Place the bowl on top of the saucepan with simmering water. (The water should not touch the bowl.) Whisk constantly for 7 minutes or until the mixture is light and frothy and the whisk leaves a trail through the mix. You may need to remove the bowl from the heat occasionally to avoid overheating. Vigorous whisking off the heat can remedy uneven or very slightly curdled zabaglione. Spoon over the berries and serve immediately.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 23

Planetary action makes for an intense day. Be sure to start off with an upbeat attitude. The moon enters Scorpio at 5:50 a.m. At 12:06 p.m., Pluto, the planetary ruler of Scorpio, begins direct travel at 12 1/2-degrees of Sagittarius. This is a potent combination. You may feel forced to deal with issues that just won't go away and make tough choices. Eliminate negativity in your life; let go of past hurts and resentments. Open your heart to higher visions. Because Pluto is a slow-moving planet, its influence has affected the last few days and will continue to linger.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 24

Yesterday's advice pertains to today as well. The moon continues its travel in Pluto-ruled Scorpio. You may have to face the facts about situations that have been troubling you. This is a great day for tackling projects that need mental concentration, study, research. You can cut through obstacles and get to the bottom of things. Take quiet time out for yourself. Important insights and inspirations may come, if you have quiet space and time to listen.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 25

Wake up in a good mood. The Scorpio moon aligns with Venus at 7:16 a.m. and becomes inactive. Influences turn around completely at 10:59 a.m., when the moon enters ebullient Sagittarius. The remainder of the day rates high for enjoying favorite friends and pastimes. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 3:55 p.m. A full moon is building and will culminate September 2. A lunar alignment to Neptune this evening prompts you to forget your troubles and let the good times roll.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 26

The moon continues to travel in upbeat Sagittarius. However, it forms challenging contacts to Pluto and Saturn that are in effect between 9:24 a.m.-2:21 p.m. This can be a very emotional period, when deep feelings or hidden resentments surface. On the other hand, this interval is ideal for spending time alone. Look within for answers, and you'll find what you need to get back on track. By mid-afternoon the optimistic side of a Sagittarius moon returns, making the remainder of the day prime for socializing, enjoying favorite leisure activities.

MONDAY, AUGUST 27

Lunar alignments to Mercury and Mars may spark emotional fireworks this morning. Take it slow and easy. At 8:50 a.m. the Sagittarius moon becomes inactive, making this day ideal for vacationing. If you can, take extra time out for yourself; get back in the swing of favorite sports or exercise programs. Venus enters Leo at 12:12 a.m., remaining there until September 20. The moon enters practical Capricorn at 8:02 p.m.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 28

A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Mars occurs at 8:42 a.m., warning you to slow down. Think before you say or do something you will later regret. The moon continues its travel in business-oriented Capricorn. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full work agenda. You can be most productive today and tomorrow.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 29

Go with your ambitious side. A Capricorn moon makes this an excellent day for getting things done. The green light is on for making decisions, signing contracts. Zero in on duties and responsibilities you have taken on. Now is the time to follow through.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 30

The Capricorn moon aligns with Mercury at 2:28 a.m. and becomes inactive. At 7:48 a.m. an Aquarius moon takes over, generating an upbeat mood. Lunar alignments to Venus and Neptune make this a great day to network, brainstorm and dream, but get a reality check before making a major commitment. Gather with friends and enjoy life to its fullest this evening.

Uncommon trees and shrubs for the landscape

Green thumbs up

Part I

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the summer growing season begins to wind down, cooler temperatures and shorter day length seem to rekindle the gardening spirit. Before long, asters, mums, ornamental kale, and spring-flowering bulbs will entice us to return to our local nurseries as we endeavor to spruce up some of our tired, overgrown summer plantings. Many garden centers have reduced their prices on perennials, trees and shrubs as healthy, new nursery stock arrives for fall planting. Late August and September are usually ideal for renovating lawns, dividing and transplanting perennials and planting a wide range of trees and shrubs.

For those gardeners who feel compelled to grow every plant commercially available, the quest for the new and unusual is never-ending. Uncommon plants are sometimes the first treasures to be scooped up in the spring by discriminating gardeners like ourselves, but occasionally these plants are overlooked because they are unknown or perhaps more costly. Late summer sales may be your golden opportunity to acquire these unique or rare offerings at considerable savings, not to mention that these potential discounts are a wonderful excuse to browse for bargains through nurseries across the state and beyond.

Although I could not imagine my landscape without magnolias, crabapples, dogwoods and rhododendrons, I take special delight in those trees, shrubs, and perennials that are less commonly grown. Every year, exciting new plants are introduced into the nursery trade in addition to different or improved cultivars of familiar plants. If time, space, and my pocketbook would allow, I would collect dwarf conifers and woody plants in addition to the vast diversity of perennials I have already accumulated, but for now, I am content to grow a small number of less commonly known trees and shrubs while my wish list for other unusual plants continues to expand.

The golden ninebark (Physocarpus opulifolius) is an attractive deciduous shrub which produces small, lobed leaves on branches up to 10 feet tall. The pale, lime-green foliage serves as a handsome backdrop for plants having blue-green or burgundy foliage including large blue hosta and the bronze-tinted bugbanes, Cimicifuga 'Brunette' or C. Hillside Black Beauty'. Small, two-inch flower heads, reminiscent of Spirea 'Snowmound', appear in early summer and are white with just a hint of pink. When the foliage drops, peeling bark provides winter interest.

About this time last season, I discovered a new cultivar of this native shrub, P. 'Diablo', which now ranks near the top of my long list of favorite plants. As its name suggests, 'Diablo' boasts exciting chocolate brown to deep purple foliage providing season-long color and contrast and makes a dramatic statement when combined with the bright pink blooms of purple coneflower (Echinacea), black-eyed Susans (Rudbeckia goldstrum.) or practically any pale-colored flowers set against its deep bronze foliage.

Ninebark can be pruned severely in spring to produce dense, compact shrubs but the flowers will be sacrificed as the shrub blooms on old wood and is best pruned just after flowering if blooms are desired. Provide a moisture-retentive, fertile, acid soil in full sun to partial shade.

Another recent addition to my shrub border, the Seven-Son Flower (Heptacodium. miconiodes) offers numerous desirable attributes and fulfills my wish to grow plants which provide multiple seasons of interest. This little known, vigorous shrub from China can potentially reach a height of 15 feet and can be trained as a small tree as well as a multi-stemmed shrub. Shiny, pointed, dark green leaves, with wavy margins on arching stems, are attractive all season long with clusters of tiny, very fragrant, creamy white flowers appearing in late summer, and early autumn. Small purple fruit are formed but soon drop, leaving behind showy, reddish-pink sepals which persist into November. A mature specimen exhibits gorgeous, exfoliating bark which is gray, beige and brown for lovely winter appeal. Tolerant of drought and salt, Heptacodium will thrive in a wide range of conditions but prefers a moderately fertile, well-drained soil in sun to partial shade.

For smaller landscapes, the dwarf fothergilla (F. gardenii) provides delightful spring bloom and handsome fall foliage. Fothergillas prefer moisture-retentive, well-drained soils, rich in organic matter, in sun or shade but will produce more abundant flowers and demonstrate their spectacular fall color to greatest advantage given more sunlight. These dense, compact shrubs produce fragrant, silky, white bottlebrush flowers in springtime prior to the appearance of their attractive oval, toothed leaves which turn vivid shades of yellow, orange and scarlet in autumn. The cultivar, F. 'Blue Mist' features lovely blue-green foliage. Fothergilla major is a larger, more upright variety, reaching a height of 8 to 10 feet. Native to the Allegheny Mountains, these unique shrubs are ideal for the woodland garden or as a specimen plant in the perennial or shrub border.

Join the New England Daylily Society for its annual public plant sale and auction Saturday, Aug. 25 beginning at noon at the Waltham Field Station, 240 Beaver St. in Waltham. Come a little early to explore the bargain tables and get advice from members about the plants which are bare root and arranged by color.

Schools double as construction zones

Opening day is Sept. 5

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

"It looks like an erector set."
—Town Manager Mark Haddad

Just two weeks ago, the quad at Cohasset Middle/High School looked like something out of a war zone. One side had been torn down, leaving piles of cement and bricks on the former grassy area. Twisted and bent steel support rods stuck out from the heaps of rubble.

Now the debris is gone, but the side of the school that use to house the school library is still missing, replaced by utility pipes held up by scaffolding and a bulldozed landscape.

Next week, life with the $41 million school construction project begins in earnest when students once again fill the school's halls, and attempt to carry on as if nothing has happened.

"This is a construction project, and I think most parents have an understanding of that," said School Building Committee Chairman Rob Spofford. "I hope parents would understand that our goal is not to have the students' education be disrupted at all. The building, while an integral part, is not what educates children. What educates are the teachers and students who come well prepared."

A recent walk through of the Deer Hill School and middle/high school showed two schools trying to look as normal as possible, despite being in a state of flux.

This past summer's asbestos removal left both schools, for the most part, with concrete floors. The old grassy knoll in front of the Deer Hill has been paved over to replace the parking lot that was sacrificed to the new wing which is currently taking shape.

Swift changes open door for permit reviews

Affects affordable housing count

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

For some concerned Cohasset residents, the idea of a massive housing development on one of Cohasset's last stretches of commercially zoned land has become all too real.

Since June, Avalon Bay Properties has been in preliminary discussions with town boards about the feasibility of using a comprehensive permit to construct a 250-unit rental apartment unit complex at the former site of the Norfolk Conveyor property, on Route 3A across from Atlantic Bagel.

Under a comprehensive permit, a developer could skirt local zoning bylaws, such as density and land-use restrictions, by reserving 25 percent of the total units constructed for affordable housing.

The development would result in a 9 percent increase of the total housing units in town, along one of the most traveled roads in the region. But because less than 3 percent of the town's housing units are considered affordable, well below the state quota of 10 percent, Cohasset had few options to defeat the project.

However, changes to the affordable housing law recently unveiled by acting Governor Jane Swift could result in a scaled-down version of the project, and would give the towns like Cohasset more ammunition to shoot down proposals in the future. Swift's revisions,

Amphipod holds up Hingham Lumber

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Hingham Lumber's proposal to move to Route 3A in Cohasset hit a snag last week when Conservation Commission approval was held up by the existence of a rare freshwater crustacean on the site.

The Mystic Valley Amphipod — a one-quarter to half-inch crustacean that lives in cool, shallow, slow moving water with leaf litter — is considered a species of special concern by the Natural Heritage & Endangered Species Program (NHESP), a branch of the state Division of Fisheries and Wildlife. According to a NHESP Web site, "special concern species" are native species that have suffered a decline in numbers that could threaten the species if allowed to continue unchecked, or which occur in such small numbers or with such restricted distribution or specialized habitat requirements that they could easily become threatened within Massachusetts.

Electrical short cause of technical difficulties

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

Minot's Ledge Lighthouse —with its powerful gray granite tower rising out of the sea — is an impressive sight to all mariners. But its most distinctive feature as an aid to navigation is the light sequence its lantern room beams out over the Atlantic alerting boaters to the rocky ledges along the Scituate and Cohasset coastlines.

"That history has made Minot's Ledge Lighthouse, one of the most romantic and tragic lights in the world."
John Galluzzo, Scituate Historical Society

An electrical short in the lighthouse flasher put its light out of sequence for a couple of days this week, a situation that's not all that unusual, say Coast Guard officials.

"It happens once in a while," said Petty Officer Geoff Mongillo in the Aids to Navigation office for Coast Guard Group Boston. "We had to replace the flasher, something had shorted out."

The electrical problem caused the light sequence to go from its usual 1-4-3 signal pattern to a steady

When Beechwood gets the blues

Parishioners cook up a storm

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

"You just touch them and eight-to-10 fell off."
— Bud Hollis

If you were feeling blue Sunday night, then the best place to be was the Beechwood Congregational Church for the annual blueberry festival.

Diets aside, there was no better place to lift the spirits and cure a hankering for something sweet than in the church hall where blueberry delights were in abundant supply.

Like a friendly constable, Nancy Snowdale, former town treasurer, stood guard at the door and aptly collected the $4 admission fee from dozens of ravenous parishioners and visitors. Once inside, the hungry throng then queued up for a big slice of blueberry pie or blueberry shortcake topped with a healthy scoop of vanilla ice cream and smothered with homemade blueberry sauce.

The blueberries — by the quart — were courtesy of Nancy's son, Alan Snowdale, who offers the first pick from his 300 bushes off Mill Lane to the church each year.

"It was a real good crop this year, the weather was perfect for it," says Marilyn "Mel" Hollis, who picked 22 quarts with her husband Bud for the festival. "The bushes were loaded with berries."

"You just touch them and eight to 10 fell off," added Bud.

Town has plenty of water, McNabb says

"We have more than enough water for Cohasset's needs for 2025 and beyond."
— John McNabb, water commissioner

Cohasset residents have plenty of drinking water in their municipal supply and are not facing a water shortage, said Water Commission Chairman John McNabb.

"Cohasset has plenty of water," said McNabb. "Cohasset residents have nothing to worry about. I need to set the record straight after the Boston Sunday Globe, citing a study by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC), incorrectly gave the impression that Cohasset was facing a water shortage. They are dead wrong."

"The facts are," said McNabb, "that Cohasset's public drinking water supply has a safe yield of 3.5 million gallons per day, and we are only using at present about 680,000 gallons per day on average. We have a vast water supply. The Aaron River Reservoir can hold up to 323 million gallons. The Lily Pond Water Treatment plant has a design capacity of 3.0 million gallons per day. So, we have a long way to go before we put any strain on the water supply."

McNabb criticized the MAPC and the Globe for calling this a "water crisis" that "spells trouble," and "strains water supplies" in Cohasset when in fact, he said "Cohasset has no problem with the amount of water in its supply, which is not being strained at all. They have misled the people of Cohasset by crying wolf about a water crisis that does not exist."

McNabb said that MAPC made a major mistake by looking at just the state withdrawal limits, which Cohasset has been exceeding, and then concluding that meant there was a shortage. "While Cohasset has been exceeding the state withdrawal limit," he said, "that is not a problem, since we are still well below our safe yield. This limit is just a "paper limit" – which can, and will, be changed."

"We have not have a summer water ban since 1995," said McNabb, "and that ban was not because of a shortage of supply but because of problems with our distribution system – problems which have been rectified. We are virtually the only town in Southeastern Mass. that does not have a regular summer water ban. We have more than enough water for Cohasset's needs for 2025 and beyond."

"In fact," said McNabb, "Hingham Mass-American Water, which has a real water shortage problem (which MAPC and the Globe missed), has come to us to see if we could sell them 500,000 gallons of day – which we can, because of the abundance of our supply. We are exploring that possibility and expect to being the question to a vote at the October 29 Special Town Meeting."

Mercury poses health threats

The Massachusetts Interagency Mercury Task Force is beginning a statewide public awareness campaign to deliver a message to residents – mercury is toxic and must be handled carefully.

"Without the facts, it is easy to mishandle mercury," a recent letter to local communities from the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs (EOEA) states. "Exposure to mercury can be harmful to your health."

Mercury is harmful to developing fetuses and children and can damage wildlife, including birds and fish.

More than 40 percent of the Commonwealth's lakes and ponds that have been tested contain fish with unsafe levels of mercury. These fish pose health threats to humans when they are eaten.

According to the EOEA, mercury must be removed from the solid waste stream so it does not continue to be released into the environment.

Further information about mercury and its safe disposal is available by calling the toll-free mercury hotline, 1-866-9MERCURY.

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m., Tuesdays.

Dear Friends,

When I first visited Bali in 1995, I had the good fortune to meet the talented "Mr. Tommy," who hand-tailored an exquisite Balinese leather coat for me. As I slipped into that coat, I discovered the true meaning of the expression "soft as butter."

Now I am delighted to share that exquisite feeling with you...with the introduction of the Charlotte's Boutique limited edition line of Balinese leather coats, all as carefully hand-tailored as the original, in several styles and colors. I'm sure you'll love what you see!

Town wants homework done on early retirement plan

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset selectmen have signed on to a request made by their counterparts in Canton for the state to look into whether the Teachers Early Retirement Law violates the prohibition against unfunded state mandates found in Proposition 2-1/2.

The law, passed in 2000 as part of a package designed to stimulate teacher recruitment and retention in Massachusetts, allows those who contribute 11 percent of their weekly salary to a pension program to retire after 30 years with 80 percent of their salary.

However, according to Cohasset Town Manager Mark Haddad, the result of more teachers retiring sooner are increasing benefit costs to the town.

"Right now $298,000 is taken off our cherry sheet [Chapter 70 state school aid]," said Haddad, "and with this law, that number is going to go even higher."

Canton Executive Secretary William Friel said in a letter to Cohasset selectmen that his town will be hit with an additional $464,000 in health insurance costs when an estimated 62 eligible teachers opted for the program.

The situation is less dire in Cohasset, with just five teachers taking advantage of the program last year, and one this year.

The law allows those who contribute 11 percent of their weekly salary to a pension program to retire after 30 years with 80 percent of their salary.

Selectmen said last week, and Haddad reiterated this week, that by asking the state Auditor's Office Division of Local Mandates to look at the law, the town is not being anti-teacher.

"It's all nice and good...but the state cannot just pass along an unfunded state mandate," Haddad said.

Cohasset teachers union president Ed Leonard, a guidance counselor at the middle/high school, said he didn't feel the selectmen were being anti-teacher.

"That's not my sense here," he said. "I think it's a great thing, we need to make sure it's fully funded."

Haddad explained that under Prop 2-1/2 if the state Legislature does not include funding measures for its mandates, it has to include a local option allowing communities to decide whether to adopt the law.

"That way the town understands the costs," he said.

Glen Briere, spokesman for state auditor Joseph DeNucci's, said his office has received letters from "several" communities on the issue, and is waiting for some numbers from the Massachusetts Retirement Board before making a decision whether to conduct a review.

He said if DeNucci makes a formal determination that the law is an unfunded mandate, it can be used as prima facie evidence in court if a town decides to go that route. Other than that, the office has no enforceable power.

Attorney General approves 10 bylaw changes, rejects one

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

State Attorney General Thomas Reilly's office approved 10 of the 11 general and zoning bylaw changes Cohasset voters passed at last spring's Town Meeting, and waved a caution flag on another.

The state Municipal Law Unit, which reviews all proposed changes to a town's bylaws, threw out warrant article 29 — a citizens petition that issued a number of conditions before a private landfill site assignment could be submitted — saying it was in conflict with state law and also poorly constructed.

The article, authored by Water Commissioner John McNabb, prohibited the Board of Health from accepting a site assignment, holding a public hearing, or approving a site assignment for any proposed private solid waste facility where it was not allowed as a matter of right, and required the plan receive zoning approval from the town Building Inspector before it could be taken up.

The bylaw change passed with the needed two-thirds vote at Town Meeting.

But not so fast, said the AG's office.

Bob Ritchie, director of the state's Municipal Law Office, said each sentence and provision of the bylaw was flawed.

The first sentence, which prohibited the Board of Health from accepting a site plan, or holding a public hearing for a proposed landfill outside of an area zoned for that use, is a direct violation of a state law passed in 1987.

According to the AG's office, the sate law says "if the Department of Environmental Protection issues a report saying [state guidelines and regulations] have been met, then the Board of Health must accept the application and must hold a public hearing."

Ritchie said private landfill proposals have the right to ask for a special permit allowing them in areas where they are not allowed by right.

"That's where it was fatally flawed," he said.

Ritchie also had problems with "inconsistent language," and the singling out of "privately owned or operated" facilities.

The state Municipal Law Unit, which reviews all proposed changes to a town's bylaws, threw out warrant article 29.

"It's a uniformity problem," he said, explaining privately-owned facilities have the same rights and problems as publicly-owned facilities.

The AG's office also said the last two sentences, which require proposed sites to receive a favorable zoning ruling by the town Building Inspector, needs to be approved through a change in the zoning bylaws, not general bylaws.

"We would have stricken that part in any event," Ritchie said.

Although the AG's office approved article 15, which changed the town's hazardous materials bylaw, it did so with a caveat.

The town bylaw gave the town Board of Health or health agent's permission to enter privately owned property for the purpose of "performing its duties." However, according to the AG's office, the town does not have the ability to give such authorization.

"When entry upon private property is necessary or appropriate for the investigation or suspected violation of the bylaw, it would be necessary...to obtain an administrative search warrant to do so in the absence of express permission by the owner," the AG's opinion said.

The AG's office also approved:

- article 16, which expanded the town's Water Resource District
- article 18, which gave selectmen the power to set expiration dates for parking permits and stickers
- article 19, which made it illegal to dump private refuse in public containers, and established fine amounts
- article 20, which rezoned the Hagerty Property as open space
- article 22, which prohibited fences from being higher than six feet
- article 24, which changed zoning conditions for work done within 100 feet of a tidal area
- article 25, which prohibited common driveways from being constructed within five feet of the property line
- article 28, which banned mercury thermometers from being sold in Cohasset
- article 30, which prohibited land use-variances from being given by the zoning board of appeals

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PRITCHARD

SUMMER'S END

Hello Cohasset Web. I have tried to stomp on the brake peddle and hold off the end of summer but it just didn't work! School is less than a week away, the nights are a little cooler and Sept. 11 is only a few days away.

The wonderful thing, however, about living in New England is that each season is so beautiful most of the time and fall is usually a great and pretty little do out year. I just wish it didn't sneak up each year quite so fast.

TOP EQUESTRIENNE

Congratulations to Sarah Lambert, a sophomore at Cohasset High School, who has been competing on the Arabian hunter/jumper horse show circuit this summer. Last week, she won the Massachusetts Horsemen Council junior medal and the New England Horsemen Council junior medal. These first-place ribbons qualify Sarah to compete against the top New England riders at the medal finals this fall. Sarah trains at River Wind Farm with Carl Catani and Abby Greer, another Cohasset equestrienne. This is awesome, Sarah!

SYRACUSE GRAD

Syracuse University in New York recently graduated a young lady from Cohasset in its May Commencement Ceremonies. Andrea Grew of Flintlocke Ridge Road received a degree in Marketing Management and was named to the dean's list for the Spring 2001 semester.

Congratulations.

DEAN'S LIST

Babson College also has some Cohasset students to brag about. Lindy Ann Holway, daughter of Mr. & Mrs. David Holway; Karen D. Niessink, daughter of Mr. & Mrs. Jan Niessink; and Mark A. Whitman, son of Mr. & Mrs. Peter Whitman, all were named to the dean's list for this schools Spring semester, 2001. Great job to you all!

YOUNG RACER

We have a graduate of another kind to talk about and I think this is really cool. Ryan Kucinski, a 12-year-old, graduated recently from the Junior Race School at F1 Boston, the region's only indoor race track. Great names like Jeff Gordon, Tony Stewart and Michael Schumacher all share one thing in common-they all started their careers behind the wheel of a racing cart. Boston's Junior Race School is the place for children to get a safe and thorough course on how to race carts, and also, the importance of confidence, coordination, discipline and control. Because Ryan successfully completed the Race School, he is now eligible to take part in F1 Boston's Junior Leagues and Practice Sessions. If any of you want to check out F1 Boston, you may go to their Web site at www.f1boston.com. Fantastic racing, Ryan!

ART EXHIBIT

Come to an opening reception on Sunday, Sept 2, at the Scituate Arts Association Gallery at 132 Front St., Cohasset artist Don Paiva will exhibit "A Shore Thing", a collection of recent works of watercolor. Among Mr. Paiva's favorite subjects are local scenes including lighthouses, harbors and lobster boats. A reception will be held at the Gallery at 132 Front St. in Scituate from 2-5 p.m. The show will be on display through Sept. 30. This would be a nice way to spend a Sunday afternoon and view some wonderful art.

Sarah Lambert on Hans Anderson jumps one of the obstacles in a recent competition.

HOMETOWN VISIT

Dana Doggett of Orem, Utah was in town on business and pleasure last week. He stayed with his parents, Tom and Polly Doggett of Hugh Strain Road and renewed friendships with high school friends and visited his aunts in New Hampshire. It is seldom that he is able to come alone without one or all five of his children to enjoy the beauty of Cohasset. Like a true New Englander, he managed while here to get his fill of yummy fried clams and lobster. Hope that you had a great week!

REGISTER FOR GIRL SCOUTS

Just a reminder to all the Girl Scouts out there. Registration will be taking place for girls in grades Kindergarten-12. This will take place at the Deer Hill School Cafe on Wednesday, Sept. 19 from 7-8 p.m. Anyone who is interested in leading a Troop may also attend this night or give Terry James a call at 781-383-9173.

SCHOOL DAYS

As all of us know quite well, school begins next Wednesday, Sept 5. Please remember to watch for the school buses and children who are waiting for them. It is time for us all to check our speeds, slow down when the buses ask us to with the stop lights and signs and overall, just be a little more aware of the kids. Also remember that the Deer Hill and Osgood have new starting times. The Deer Hill is at 8:35 and the Osgood is at 9:05. Make sure to welcome the new Joseph Osgood School principal, Mrs. Janet Sheehan who is very excited for the first day of school. Don't forget to gather together all the stuff that the kids need for a great first week! Starting next month, the Schools In page will begin. This page and column will happen on the fourth Thursday of each month and will feature news, celebrations of children from all the schools in the form of poetry, drawings or stories and much, much more. If you have any news or other items for this column, you may email it, phone it in, send it or fax.

It will be a great school year.

That is it for this week. I will close the column with another quote for us all to think about.

"Know that you are your greatest enemy, but also your greatest friend." — Jeremy Taylor

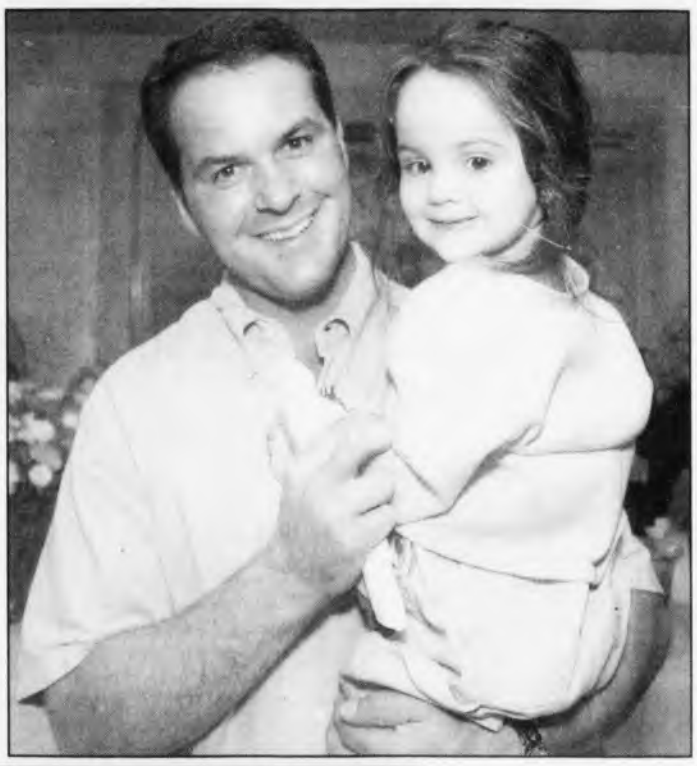
nizer of the event, said the church breaks even on the annual festival which provides a nice way for neighbors and friends to get together at the end of the summer. A former pastor started the festival about 10 years ago and was so popular, it kept on going, she said.



In addition to scrumptious desserts, the highlight of the evening was the "pound" auction during which all kinds of gifted-wrapped [and therefore, secret] delectable items that each weighed a pound were offered to the highest bidder, who had to rely on the shape of the article for clues to its contents.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, was on hand with his two-year-old daughter Amanda, who "loves blueberries," he said. Bradley, sporting a big grin, took home a blueberry pie from the auction.

Bud Hollis anted up enough to win two packages of blueberry muffins. Another bidder walked away with his wife's blueberry cake, while others bid on fresh quarts of "lovingly, hand-picked" blueberries, among other items. A woman won a pet rock with a gift certificate hidden under it to Bickfords restaurant – where no doubt she'll enjoy a breakfast of blueberry pancakes.

Lisa Brown made a honey wheat cake that was auctioned off for $5. But that was no match for the blueberry muffins made by her husband, Kishore Mohapatra, that sold for $8.

"It's a fun time," Bud Hollis said.

Above, State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, with his two-year-old daughter Amanda, is all smiles as he waits in line for blueberry pie and ice cream.

At left, Arthur Somerville watches his wife of 70 years, Jeanette, open one of the auctioned items at the Beechwood Church Blueberry Festival on Sunday evening.

Minot sending mixed signals

flashing mode of 1-1-1. A boater noticed the problem and reported it to the Coast Guard Sunday, Mongillo said. "We rely on local mariners to let us know if something is wrong with one of our lighthouses."

Rough seas on Monday kept the Coast Guard from getting out to the lighthouse, which is accessible only by boat, to replace the flasher. "We don't have the big Coast Guard vessels used for rescues," Mongillo noted.

But by 2 p.m. Tuesday the Coast Guard had fixed the problem and the lighthouse was shining its familiar 1-4-3 pattern once again.

Minot's 1-4-3 sequence has been the subject of local legend and lore. Some of the stories tell of a love-lorn lightkeeper sending the message I love you, back to his wife on shore. Others maintain the love signal was being sent out to fishermen and sea captains on their way out or back from some long journey. The supposedly symbolic sequence of numbers has made its way onto bumper stickers and T-shirts and a host of collectible lighthouse paraphernalia as well. It has become known to many as "the lovers light."

But beyond the legends and sentimentality locals like to perpetuate, lies the real reason Minot's light flashes the way it does. Cohasset Historical Society Curator David Wadsworth explains that in the late 19th century, the U.S. Lighthouse Service decided to assign a distinctive signal to each lighthouse to aid in the identification of its location.

"All lighthouses have different sequences," added Mongillo. "That's so mariners charting courses can tell what light they're near or passing."

Minot was in fact one of the first lighthouses to be given an identifying signal and it has held onto it years after the Lighthouse Service project was abandoned.

"The legend imputing some sentimental reason for the 1-4-3 pattern is pure fiction, invented and repeated by shore-side sentimentalists ignorant of the real facts of the case.," Wadsworth wrote in a Cohasset Historical Society newsletter. "No love-struck keeper invented the signal, just a large government agency in Washington.

While he thinks some of the songs, poems and stories are "corny", John Galluzzo, special projects coordinator for the Scituate Historical Society has no disdain for the myths surrounding the lighthouse and its signal. Indeed, Galluzzo said the legends and the people who perpetuate them are part of the history of the light itself.

The truth behind the signal is that it dates back to the 1890s, said Galluzzo. "It was a randomly assigned number." But Galluzzo can appreciate that it has come to mean much more to local and not-so-local lighthouse lovers. Galluzzo, who collects poems and songs from books and newspaper clippings, often gets calls from lighthouse enthusiasts with requests for copies of the music or sonnets written about Minot's Light. One particular ditty penned by D.M Stewart in 1916 is especially sappy, said Galluzzo, who has both the lyrics and music to the song. "Some of this stuff is really bad," he said.

Other clippings he's collected hold more local historic interest. Galluzzo noted that Thomas Lawson, Scituate's own "copper king," wrote a poem on the famous lighthouse for his daughter's wedding. "Lawson could see the lighthouse from the front of his Dreamwold Estate back before all the trees in the area grew up," Galluzzo said.

"It all has a purpose," Galluzzo said of the songs, and sonnets and stories that make certain lighthouses memorable.

"There's good value to it because it is now part of history, the history of the light. And that history has made Minot's Ledge Lighthouse, one of the most romantic and tragic lights in the world."

Summer diary

Why is it so hard to recall the month of June in vivid detail as the end of August approaches? By summer's end are we so awash in sunshine that we can't remember how beautiful the irises were in June, how perfect the green leaves were on the trees, so tall and full? The fireflies of June are long gone and in their place at night we can hear the constant chirping of the crickets, a reminder that the cooler days of fall will soon be here.

It's been a strange, sometimes bizarre summer here in New England. Yes, the irises were particularly gorgeous in June, but then there were the sniper attacks on Route 3. How to explain the random terror let loose on the area as people tried to figure out ways to avoid driving on Route 3? The sniper (or snipers) must have loved all the publicity, hiding in the woods along Route 3 during the day and then returning home at night to revel in all the TV coverage. The July Fourth holiday was uneventful, even as state police helicopters hovered over the busy highway, looking for the sniper. A lot of people just stayed home since the holiday fell in the middle of the week anyway.

The weather in July was delightful and if you picked a week or two to go on vacation, you were in luck. Closer to home, local beaches remained clean and open and Mother Nature served up day after day of warm temperatures and nearly perfect skies. Some complained it was too hot, but the really scorching days waited until the end of July and early August, allowing the South Shore to bask in a wonderful summer.

Although in truth, not an entirely wonderful summer. It's been a bad season for coyotes which have been attacking and eating area cats this summer. Evil walked among us for a time in the form of Gary Sampson, the drifter who is believed to have brutally killed two South Shore men and another in New Hampshire. His rampage was apparently fueled by madness, hatred and drugs and did much to take away the innocence of the friends and family of Jonathan Rizzo, his 19-year-old victim from Kingston. Anyone who has ever doubted the presence of evil in the world has been proved wrong by the actions of Gary Sampson.

The summer above all is the season to not let evil hold sway over goodness. There is much to be thankful for and summer reminds us of this fact. True, there have been tragedies in the human realm — a young man inexplicably drowned in Little Sandy Pond in Pembroke early one night while swimming with friends — and anomalies in the natural world. Churchill, the injured whale, is still swimming off the coast of New England even though experts who failed to save the creature said it could not live much longer. That was several weeks ago. Sharks are going berserk here and elsewhere, attacking swimmers. The Cape was terrorized for a time by close encounters with sharks.

Even so, there have been lighter moments. A young bald eagle accused of attacking people on Hampton Beach is being sent to rehab so he can learn a natural fear of, and proper respect for, humans. Wildlife experts say the bird is "a brat" and has "issues." But will rehab work? We'll just have to wait and see.

Perhaps President Bush had the best idea of all this summer. Take the month of August off. It must be nice.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Police acting appropriately

TO THE EDITOR:

Before I offer my two-cents to the ongoing discussion of the problem of underage drinking, two quick disclaimers: First, I don't pretend to be an expert in this area and second, I don't (yet) have any teenagers. Still, as a resident of this town who is concerned about this issue, I would like to make some general statements in the context of the news articles and letters to the editor which have appeared recently in the Mariner.

First and foremost, I think it is clear that nothing has been said which in any way suggests that our police officers, either collectively or individually, have done anything which even remotely might be construed as improper conduct. To, the contrary, our police department has acted legally and appropriately. I'm sure I speak for the vast majority of residents who support the way in which our police are handling these matters.

Second, the concept that a police officer should exercise some degree of discretion and not arrest those who are breaking the law ignores the reality of the typical situation. For openers, let's admit the simple fact that when a young person is arrested for the first time for underage drinking, the categorization of the arrestee as a "first-time offender" is a misnomer. This may be the first time that the youngster has been caught with alcohol, but the reality is that he or she has been a user of alcohol dozens of times before he or she was unlucky enough to have been arrested on that occasion.

Still, both the local police and the judge are willing to dispel with that reality and allow the so-called first-time offender to dispose of the matter by means of what is known as a pre-arraignment dismissal. The significance - and it is very significant - is that the arrestee does not have a criminal record which would follow him or her for the rest of his or her life. On the other hand, this lenient disposition is available only once to a person - and it is made clear in no uncertain terms to the young person that if he or she is arrested again, he or she will face the appropriate consequences. Presumably, to a rational-minded young person, this threat of future consequences hopefully will instill in him or her the commitment to take the underage drinking laws seriously. However, if the police officer does not make the arrest, the young person will not go through the judicial process - and thus there is no threat of future consequences which presumably will encourage law-abiding behavior.

Moreover, how can anyone seriously expect any police officer to do anything but arrest youths who clearly have been drinking, who are in some sort of state of altered consciousness, and who have alcohol in their possession? Is the officer just supposed to confiscate their alcohol, give them the proverbial stern warning, and let them go their merry way - thus leaving them free to drink some more and perhaps get behind the wheel of a car? Why are some adults blind to the possibility for tragic consequences - of the very sort which have occurred within our community in recent years - if our police were to adopt a non-arrest policy, not to mention the obvious liability to the town which would arise because an officer failed to act according to the law? Further, how can any police officer be expected to pick and choose whom to arrest without being subject to charges of favoritism? The law applies equally to all.

So third, let's stop blaming the police simply for doing their job by enforcing laws for which they have taken an oath to uphold. I would hope that any right-thinking adult realizes that if their under aged son or daughter is involved with alcohol, especially in a situation involving a motor vehicle, that police intervention and the subsequent wrist-slap by the judicial system for first-offenders might be a necessary first step in identifying a real problem.

Finally, this brings us to where this issue truly needs to be addressed - and that is in the home. Based upon my own admittedly narrow personal experience, it has been my observation that parents who do not set limits for their teenagers are asking for trouble. Further, as parents we can be the best - or worst - examples for our children, which is to say, that if we are party-types, then so will our children. Too many parents - everywhere, not just in Cohasset - have a laissez faire attitude toward their teens' drinking. But just because we may have grown up in an era when it was OK to be "young, stupid, and drunk" (in the words of Dean Wormer in Animal House), it does not mean that we should forebear from imparting the wisdom acquired from our mistakes to our children - and acting accordingly as parents.

A zero-tolerance policy by law enforcement alone never will solve any problem. But to the extent this policy may prevent some tragedies and, perhaps provide a wake-up call to some parents and some teens, it does serve a significant purpose and play a significant role in dealing with this issue.

P.S.: Despite by own admonition at the start of this letter, I do want to reply to the young man who concluded his recent lengthy letter by pithily noting that from now on he will be sure to check that his muffler is in working order each time he drives his car. First and foremost, it's good to see that he learned something from his friend having received a citation. Second, in addition to checking one's muffler, a motor vehicle driver should ensure that every vehicle he or she may drive is registered, inspected and insured; that the front lights, tail lights, brake lights, and directional lights are in working order; and that he or she obeys speed limits, stop signs, red lights, and all of the other rules of the road. This is not a comprehensive list by any means of what one's responsibilities are as a driver of an automobile, but the point is, whether a person is 20 years of age or 120, failure to obey the law does have consequences - there is no exemption for being young and possessing an attitude which suggests that young people somehow are above the law. All of us make mistakes. All of us do dumb things. And when we get caught, we must accept the consequences, hopefully learn from our mistakes, and move on - without blaming the police or anybody else for our own negligence/ignorance.

Walkers, joggers must be oblivious

TO THE EDITOR:

What an exciting town this is!

To witness death-defying acts each day, just drive along one of our narrow curving streets and observe walkers and joggers with their backs to the traffic, instead of using common sense and walking/jogging on the left so as to face oncoming traffic!

Apparently there is no law applying to pedestrians, but public safety professionals recommend facing the traffic, partly because the front view of a person is more visible, (or attention-getting) and partly because it gives the pedestrian an opportunity to step aside if he or she notes that the oncoming driver is inattentive, speeding, blinded by sun, babbling on a cell phone, meeting another vehicle, or otherwise looking a little threatening.

Here are just two examples recently observed of egregious risk taking:

Two young women pushing three-wheeled strollers, side by side, backs to traffic, on a winding and undulating section of Jerusalem Road, just north of Nichols Road, apparently oblivious to startled drivers coming round the bend and over the rise.

A deeply tanned male in dark clothes jogging into the setting sun on Atlantic Avenue near Beach Island, back to traffic, and close to invisible.

Ironically, it's probably only the drivers that experience the heart-stopping thrill of meeting a vehicle on a narrow road just opposite a pedestrian; any walker/jogger mindless enough to have his or her back to traffic must be oblivious.

There is joy in Mudville, Mass.

TO THE EDITOR:

I take exception to your recent Greenbush editorial. In fact there is joy in Mudville. The real Mudville is across the street from our new house in Holliston, Mass. It was settled by Irish immigrants who built the railroad. Today, it is a quiet neighborhood with beautifully restored houses. Indeed, Mudville residents are quite happy to be train free. I understand that the town has contacted the Rails to Trails folks to help pull up the old tracks. (Many of the houses are close to the tracks, as are homes in Cohasset, Scituate and Hingham.)

But more to the point, I was not surprised by Sec. Durand's comments regarding Greenbush. In fact, I could have written them myself months prior to the release. How could he find otherwise? How can he bite the hands that feed him? Too many powerful people are involved...too many hands are in the till. Imagine the ruckus he would have caused had he discarded the EIR? Do you think he would still have a job this week?

You and I both know that if Greenbush is built, it will cost upwards of $600 million. Is this the best way to spend precious state money? I don't think so and many others agree. Other communities across the state are waking up to the Little Dig and asking hard questions.

I am still optimistic that logic will win out and that the project will be killed. In the meantime, we have the brave town officials in Scituate and Weymouth who are standing up to protect their communities. And now we have AfTA. Hurray for Mr. Bewick! I am proud to say that I know Mr. Bewick and find him to be an upstanding citizen. Even though I am no longer a resident of the South Shore, I will be sending AfTA a check. Why? Because it is the right thing to do. Because Greenbush costs too much, serves too few and pollutes too much. Because South Shore towns deserve better.

Thanks to the internet, I can read the local papers down there and follow the ongoing debate. I will continue to support the fight against Greenbush and would do so if we were living on the West Coast or the South or.... Mr. Brennan, Mr. Sullivan, Mr. Moynihan, Mr. Kerasiotes...They are cut from the same cloth. I think you get my point.

Take care and keep those stories coming. There's plenty more action to come.

Vacation reentry can be a relief

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

If you left town for a vacation this summer, there's a re-entry situation. I'm not saying — it's a problem. It might well be as minor as merely picking up your held mail and greeting the neighbors. The reentry situation may well be considerable gratitude and relief to be back. I'm certainly not disputing Cohasset's beauty — we should be and probably are quite content here. And, I know, Cohasset has been called an escape, a buffer. We want to live this way and we've worked hard for it.

One cannot help noticing the increased volume of recyclables and the drastic decrease in trash at the RTF.

Despite the fact that one of our biggest jobs as CHS teachers used to be to make our kids more aware of the world outside Cohasset, there's a strong case for social crusaders coming out of comfortable backgrounds, the thinking somewhat analogous to the fact that hunger must be satisfied before we can think clearly; personal comfort must be obtained before we can think about the higher things in life, like the wellbeing of others. My returning from the woods and finding a package containing a gift "Compost Matters" T-shirt from a Mariner family is an example of extraordinary thoughtfulness from benefactors who have achieved the kind of inner peace possible in a place like Cohasset.

Perspective and change. Travel certainly is an education, and summer often is a time of marked change in our rhythms. The summer has seen a marked change at the RTF. One cannot help noticing the increased volume of recyclables and the drastic decrease in trash, so expensive for us to haul and to dispose of and such a glut on the earth. RTF employees and townspeople have adjusted quite well to the change. There are always a few crabby people, unfortunately — even a beautiful town does not exempt us from this aspect of reality. Employees have done what they could with antiquated machinery, very limited space, and added work. I have sensed a new satisfaction from people as they become more aware of the stuff of their lives and obtain more insight into environmental values, and so much of our lives is environment. What isn't? What doesn't come from the earth?

Perspective and change. I wonder about our exposure to nature during the summer, from smallest toddlers discovering water to Outward Bound-type experiences. Being fortunate to inherit a remote family camp Down East where the State of Maine says the lake is drinkable (probably because it's 200 feet deep) and being given a most remarkable book, "Ishmael," by Daniel Quinn, I return to town with a radical perspective that will have to be explained in a subsequent column. I hope your summer was educational. See you next time.

Grateful for this summer paradise

LOCAL VIEW

LAURYN MITTLEMAN

There's a stretch of roadway that spans three coastal towns, and on it has bloomed the best years of my life.

It's summer there . . . always . . . and the rule is there's never anywhere you absolutely must be. It's all about sand-flecked roads and wherever it be that they carry you, and soaring 'round corners to discover somehow more magical late afternoon light. Here summer's songstress Joni Mitchell lends the soundtrack for dusk-time drives, suspending time and linking images, until all blends together and you're dizzy . . . and free.

I realize I was blessed to have been raised on scenes of still town commons lit by fireflies . . . sweat shirted little ones challenging sundown . . . and lofted bedroom windows beckoning the night breeze. And while since then I've traveled quite far, I return to report that pure Earthen Beauty has made her home here. A fellow writer once described an island I love as inhabited by spirits who skit about crafting perfect moments, and alas I can pen it no better. Scituate's moon-soaked sea walls, Cohasset's candle possessed porches, and Hingham's haven harbor, are for writers and artists as enchanted and inspiring as it gets.

In other cherished images, I shall never forget all those afternoons waiting for the beach to be mine. For the hours when the sole agenda is watching the strands grow more golden as they billow before my eyes, and for swearing I feel the freckles creep 'cross my face. Then there's that lazy stagger back to the car shoes-in-hand, the brush of sand from swollen soles, and the anticipation of sea treats to come. A quiet thank you tossed toward the stretch of sand that hosted me and my guest as a Joni slow one sends us off to garden studded roads . . . and that ultimate feeling of being awake, alive and ecstatic as my ever-young co-pilot grips my knee and smiles sideways. Throwing my head backward I stretch every last cell, and somehow manage to scream silently.

And then still other days are all about art fairs. About long, easy dresses, sun-kissed copper and shade. A spot on the lawn propped up against Love, lemon ice on the lips and my breathing as steady as the flag presiding over. Furry friends beneath lawn chairs hot but still happy, exploring crisp white tents and catching smiles in other artists' eyes. Pausing to ask of friends' flower beds. Another dream of a day . . . how lucky you recognize . . . as Love's fingers wind around that souvenir jewel.

I realize I was blessed to have been raised on scenes of still town commons lit by fireflies .

And finally, the ending you dream of all winter. You fasten heeled sandals to bare legs and hope they'll still inspire "that look." The chime of ice, and then glasses over a photo-perfect summer table, and yes indeed that smile that neither fades, nor fails to say it all. Time made for a linger by the docks, an impromptu slow dance to the tune of the sailboats, and the spirit of Summertime herself right there floating alongside. One last thank you . . . this time for all out there to hear . . . for this paradise we call Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate in summer.

Terns are the swallows of the sea

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

Common Tern.

Terns are elegant to look at. They are graceful flyers. They plunge-dive in daring fashion to catch fish. They are famous for their long-distance migrations. They make a mess of moored boats. Terns are in the same family as gulls, but generally are smaller and more slender, with thinner, more pointed bills. Most have forked tails. They occasionally supplement their fish diet with insects, but are neither scavengers nor omnivores, unlike their gull cousins.

The active plume trade in the late 1800s resulted in declines in tern populations. Then came federal protection in the early 1900s, which helped to increase their numbers. Between 1920 and the mid-1970s, populations were again reduced, due to the great increase in the number of Herring Gulls. Gulls not only go after the eggs, but also will swallow young terns whole, not a pleasant sight to watch! Predation and other dangers come from foxes, rats, raccoons, owls, gulls, and human beach activity.

Terns nest in colonies near water, often saltwater. Their nest can be a shallow depression in the sand, a minimal nest in beach grass or marsh grass, a crack on a rocky ledge, or space on an unused pier or dock. Docks may provide safety from mammal predators, but no safety from falls into the water. As these old docks deteriorate to the point of being unsafe or even having to be removed, there is a movement toward building artificial platforms covered with a layer of sand. One such platform was built on Spinnaker Island (formerly Hog Island) in Hull, after the condominiums and a marina were constructed there. Common Terns adapted well to this structure, although in recent years, fewer are using it. According to Jeremy Hatch in a recent article published in the "Bird Observer", this may be due to predation by Black-crowned Night-Herons.

There are approximately 45 species of terns worldwide. Many of the 17 North American tern species are seen only rarely or infrequently in Massachusetts, while others may appear on a regular basis, but in small numbers. Only four species nest regularly in Massachusetts. These are the Common Tern, Least Tern, Roseate Tern, and Arctic Tern. According to Veit and Petersen in Birds of Massachusetts, there is one record of a Forster's Tern's nest with eggs, which was found at Plum Island in 1991. This would be the northernmost breeding location for Forster's Terns on the US Atlantic Coast.

Common Terns are indeed the most common terns along the Atlantic Coast. They are also the ones most often seen in Hingham Harbor. They are gray and white birds with a black cap and have dark, almost smudgy, areas on their primary wing tips. Their bills are usually red with black tips. They are very easily confused with Forster's Terns in spring plumage and with Arctic Terns.

The Least Tern is easy to distinguish from the others. It is much smaller, and has a yellow bill and a white forehead. (Other terns only have white foreheads when they are young.) It frequently nests in the same area with Piping Plovers, with some colonies being fenced and posted to increase protection. It is endangered in some states, but not in Massachusetts. Least Terns hover more than other terns. In fact, one of their defenses against predators is to hover above the intruder and defecate.

Arctic Terns

There are very few pairs of breeding Arctic Terns in Massachusetts now, mostly on Plymouth Beach, the Cape and the Islands. The majority breed in the Arctic as their name might indicate. They winter as far away as Antarctica, crossing the Atlantic to migrate down the West Coast of Europe and Africa. This migratory path means they may fly 22,000 miles or more a year. It also means they experience more daylight than any other animals. Their bills in breeding season are blood red to the tip, their legs are shorter than those of the common, and the only black on their wings is a narrow outline on the tips of their primaries.

The Roseate Tern became a federally endangered species in northeastern US in 1987. Massachusetts is home to about half the breeding population. It is this concentration in only a few selected areas which creates the biggest threat to their survival. These terns have a faintly rosy breast in the breeding season, black bills, tails which extend noticeably farther than their wings at rest, and wings which are very white.

The Forster's Tern, although not a regular breeder in this state does appear fairly regularly along the coast during migration, especially in the fall. It is not understood just why this should be, since most nest south of here. A popular place for Forster's Terns to build a nest is on top of a muskrat house. These terns are most easily identified in the fall when they are in winter plumage. Unlike Common, Arctic and Roseate Terns, adult Forster's Terns molt their black caps into distinctive black "ear patches" just behind the eye.

Terns will begin leaving soon, but many stay through September, with a few lingering until October or even November. For a special treat, plan a day trip to South Beach on Monomoy National Wildlife Refuge in Chatham. Chances are you will see a variety of terns as well as shorebirds. It is a 5-minute ferry run from Chatham across to South Beach. The fee is $5.00 for adults, and the ferries run hourly all day long. Call 508-945-5450 for more information.

Taking revenge for tuna salad

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see that sharks are making it a miserable summer for vacationers by taking playful nips out of surfers and other swimmers in the waters around New Smyrna Beach in Florida. That's playful for the sharks but not so playful for the surfers who have to be hustled off to the hospital to be patched together again.

It got so bad after at least 19 shark attacks had been reported that a one mile stretch of New Smyrna Beach had to be closed for the past weekend after a helicopter survey had counted between 30 and 40 sharks just off the beach, presumably waiting for lunch, and an oil called "shark repellent" was selling like, well shark repellent.

The Breakers Restaurant and Ocean View Bar is offering shark meat appetizers "to get back at them," and I think that's just the problem.

After years of munching on tuna salad sandwiches for lunch and anchovy pizza for dinner, I think it's the fish that are getting back at us.

This thought occurred to me while I was reading my Sunday Herald and, in the same edition that reported the latest shark attacks in Florida, I found the recipes for grilled tuna with ginger and garlic, Block Island striped bass with brown butter, capers and lemon, and broiled bluefish with tomato basil relish.

After years of munching on tuna salad sandwiches for lunch and anchovy pizza for dinner, I think it's the fish that are getting back at us.

How would you feel if your old Uncle Jim was being grilled with ginger and garlic or Aunt Susie was tossed into the fry pan with brown butter, capers and lemon or Grandpa was broiled with tomato basil relish? It's enough to turn us all into Mary Tyler Moores. She's the one who wants us to stop throwing live lobsters into boiling water.

If I were Charlie the Tuna, I'd stop auditioning for the Chicken o' the Sea and the Geisha folks ("Sorry, Charlie"), get in touch with my local hit man (cousin shark), and put out a contract on them and anyone else caught eating grilled tuna with ginger and garlic — incidentally another reason for not going in the water too soon after eating.

Sharks themselves are not known to be particularly tasty, although some fishermen have been able to pass off mako shark and blue shark undetected as swordfish and dogfish, a local member of the shark family, has been promoted as a good source of protein.

The Chinese regard shark fin soup as a delicacy but they also eat roasted snails and soup made of bird's nests, which are prized for the delicate flavor lent by a gelatinous substance, extracted from a type of seaweed used by Chinese swallows to bind their nests.

But I digress . . .

I doubt if the hors d'oeuvres de shark served up at The Breakers Restaurant and Ocean View Bar will do anything to curb the attacks by sharks on swimmers at New Smyrna Beach.

In fact, if my researchers are correct, it might just whet the appetites of the sharks for more hors d'oeuvres de surfer.

Local businesses make a difference

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the library's staff and board of trustees, the James Library and Center for the Arts would like to thank the following local businesses for their support of this summer's reading program for children, "First of All...READ!" Participants had the opportunity to win prizes donated from these businesses during our weekly raffles.

This summer more than 100 children participated in the library's new reading program and attended special storytime events. Hundreds and hundreds of hours were spent reading. Local business support does make a difference!

Swift changes open door for permit reviews

which don't need legislative approval, allow communities to reject comprehensive permits if the community has increased its amount of affordable housing units within the past year, or if the proposed development is "inappropriately sized" for the community.

Cohasset is most immediately impacted by the change allowing the town to deny a permit to a project larger than 200 units, which Avalon Bay Properties' proposal is.

Michael Roberts, of Avalon Bay, said despite the change, his group still plans on submitting a plan for 250 housing units to the Massachusetts Housing Finance Authority for review.

Roberts said he is still committed to working with the town to see if the two sides can make the project work.

Once the plan is submitted to the MHFA, Cohasset will get an opportunity to formally comment on the plan.

In order to be able to issue a year-long blanket denial for all comprehensive permits, Cohasset would have to show "good-faith progress" toward meeting the 10 percent quota by building at least 55 units, or 2 percent of its total housing stock.

Other changes include allowing towns to count private housing for mentally ill or retarded residents toward its affordable housing stock, and to count affordable units upon approval of the plan, rather than having to wait for the building permits to be issued. Also, new units built with a comprehensive permit now have to remain affordable for 30 years.

The revised guidelines, which take effect on Aug. 31, are very similar to changes passed by the House in July. Swift's changes, unlike the House bill, does not count mobile homes, Section 8 subsidized housing, or accessory dwellings as affordable housing. The House version is also more proactive by setting a timetable for communities to meet certain affordable housing unit quotas.

Beth Bresnahan, spokesperson for the Department of Community Housing and Development — the executive branch office that oversees enforcement of the affordable housing law — said Swift's changes are the result of a number of outreach sessions the department held between local zoning boards, which oversee the permitting process, developers and affordable housing advocates.

"These changes have been a long time in the making," she said. "Chapter 40B is the best way to create affordable housing , and we're shaping it so it works for both towns and developers.

"We held numerous 40B workshops and sessions and went out and explained the process, and received a lot of feedback, and that helped shape what was unveiled."

Bresnahan said Swift left out mobile homes and Section 8 housing because of a lack of a tracking system. For example, she said, mobile home parks have no income restrictions, as exist with affordable housing, and people with Section 8 vouchers can move from town to town.

"They're not stuck in one place. They can live in Malborough, and then move to a different community," said Bresnahan. "It's not permanent housing."

Both state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, said they liked most of the changes, but would still push to get the House bill passed into law.

"If she can get the changes done quicker, then all the credit to her," said Bradley. "But we don't want the House proposal to stop. Just like this governor changed the rules one way, another governor could change it back."

The existing affordable housing law contains a set of basic minimum standards, but the formal set of administrative guidelines and regulations, not officially outlined in the law, is left up to the executive office to develop.

Bradley said he liked "95 percent" of the changes Swift made, but was disappointed that Section 8 and accessory dwellings were not characterized as affordable housing.

"It's not as though we can put up a few new high rises, we need do as much small housing as we can, and think outside of the box," Bradley said.

Even though Hedlund agreed with Swift's decision to not count mobile homes as an affordable housing unit, he said he would push to have Section 8 vouchers included in a town's affordable housing count, and also to increase the amount of units a developer would have to reserve as affordable under a comprehensive permit.

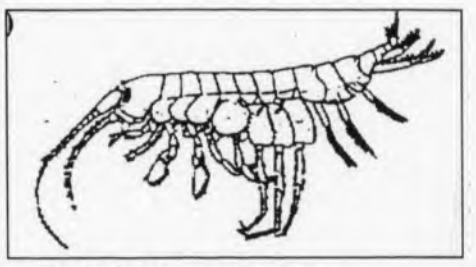
He quoted a Department of Housing and Community Development survey that said most people who use Section 8 vouchers remain in the same town on average 25 years.

Hedlund also said increasing the number of required affordable units would also test a developers' commitment to the spirit of the affordable housing law.

"Given the precedent in my communities, it seems as though developers are using 40B to maximize their profit margin," he said. "And given that history, it may be appropriate to look at raising the figures."

Cohasset's Senior Housing Committee recently identified a parcel of land off Pleasant Street it is interested in developing into affordable housing, and is in the process of drawing up plans.

Developers filed two comprehensive permits in the late 1980s, but were never completed. Hingham currently has at least five ongoing comprehensive permit projects in various stages, and Avalon Bay Properties is in the middle of constructing a 304-unit development in Weymouth.



Amphipod holds up Hingham Lumber

ties in eastern Massachusetts have reported seeing the crayfish-like critter since 1978.

The commission is now waiting for NHESP to approve the habitat protection measures proposed by the project's engineers.

Tom and John McNulty hope to build a new Hingham Lumber facility on Route 3A, next to Cohasset Collision center, that will consist of a 20,000 square-foot main showroom, and 60,000 square-foot, drive-in warehouse/storage area. The proposed Hingham Lumber site is within the Great Swamp watershed area, said project engineer Brian Buckley.

A drawing of the Mystic Valley Amphipod.

Although the amphipod is not considered endangered, it is protected under the Massachusetts Endangered Species Act, and the NHESP requires a plan to protect the animal's habitat.

At Hingham Lumber's meeting with the commission last week, Roderick Gaskill, of the engineering firm SITEK, presented a proposed set of protective measures recommended by wildlife biologist John Jahoda. SITEK represents the site's current owner, Paul Barry, and has been involved in prior wetland delineation plans for Barry's Cohasset Heights Limited landfill.

Jahoda, head of the biology department at Bridgewater State College, recommended that the Hingham Lumber plan include a 50-foot, no-build buffer zone that will allow the existing meadow to continue to grow in between the lumberyard and the habitat.

He said in his letter that "10 feet is probably an adequate buffer to prevent disturbance...while 100 feet or more would be required for a larger more sensitive vertebrate species."

Gaskill said if left untouched, the buffer zone would "eventually all grow in and create a physical barrier."

Jahoda added the lumberyard should make sure any discharged storm water should be first directed through a filtered storm water management system.

The conditions have been submitted to the NHESP, and the commission is awaiting approval.

Gaskill said he was confident the protective measures would be found sufficient by the NHESP.

"I don't know on what basis we would have to do more than what we're doing," he said.

The commission, at the recommendation of conservation agent Paul Shea, voted to approve the business' application dependent upon the NHESP's approval of the protection plan.

Commission co-chairman Deborah Cook asked the McNultys to delineate the 50-foot buffer line, and also to consider planting wild flowers in the open area between the two buildings.

The plan has already received approval from the Planning Board, and is awaiting a decision from the Zoning Board of Appeals on two special permits regarding parking and a corner of the building that juts into the floodplain.

The MBTA plans to construct its Nantasket Junction Greenbush station on the lumberyard's current Summer Street site in Hingham , and Tom McNulty told the commission that the MBTA plans on taking the land sometime "mid-next year."

Jury out on benefits of widening Route 3

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The state is considering widening Route 3 from Weymouth to Duxbury to make room for the increasing number of residents living in South Shore communities.

"This is the fastest growing area in the state," said Stephen Kelsch of Hingham, a member of the Route 3 Land Development Task Force.

But whether widening the highway is a worthwhile project needs further study, says the regional task force which was charged with taking a close look at the issue over the past year.

The group, comprised of residents from communities along the corridor, was created by Massachusetts Highway Department (MHD) at the request of Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand.

"We need to protect the effectiveness of our public transportation investments and ensure we do not simply build ourselves into another cycle of congestion," Durand said.

The task force, serving in an advisory capacity, met monthly for nearly a year to make recommendations for strategies to "preserve the livability of the affected communities" in coordination with capacity improvements proposed for Route 3.

Task force members, who were also asked to discuss project alternatives and identify land use and open space resources along the corridor that would be affected by the project, recently released a draft report.

The study notes the diversity of opinion among communities along the Route 3 corridor, which posed a challenge. A lack of technical assistance was also a drawback.

Still, task force members gave it their all and forged ahead.

The Route 3 South corridor includes the towns of Weymouth, Rockland, Hingham, Hanover, Norwell, Pembroke, Marshfield and Duxbury, as well as communities further south which are not part of the current widening proposal of the highway from Weymouth to Exit 11 in Duxbury (including Rt. 18, Derby Street and Routes 228, 53, 139 and 14 exits).

In 1999, some of the exits were plagued with as many as 60,000 vehicles per day in both directions during peak traffic times.

Since that time, the population of the South Shore has continued to skyrocket.

Route 3 has a number of purposes, including serving large developments such as Hanover Mall; accommodating trucks related to the movement of goods; and connecting Boston to Cape Cod for major recreational uses.

All things considered, some task force members see an immediate need to expand Route 3 while others are concerned about the effectiveness of such an undertaking.

Some think the project would "not carry more traffic, will not create a safer highway and will encourage more suburban sprawl. . . ."

Overall, though, members readily agree traffic congestion on the existing Route 3 is bad and getting worse, particularly during peak morning and evening commuting times.

The crunch is worst between Exit 12 (Route 139 in Marshfield) and Exit 16 (Route 18 in Weymouth).

Still, a number of members doubt adding another lane to improve capacity in each direction would solve the problem. At the same time, they agree for the most part that allowing use of the breakdown lane as a travel lane during peak commuting hours is an unsafe practice.

"Much of the discussion focused on whether widening the highway will increase growth pressures in the region."

— Route 3 Land Development Task Force

"Much of the discussion focused on whether widening the highway will increase growth pressures in the region, which will cause even worse traffic congestion in the not-so-distant future, both on Route 3 and the roads leading to it," the draft report states.

Some feel the demand could be reduced by improving mass transportation, including ferry service, commuter rail and increasing parking at MBTA facilities.

Other suggested ways to reduce peak-hour demand include tax incentives to businesses to encourage telecommuting and flex-time and introducing a toll with peak-hour pricing.

In the meantime, MHD is committing funds for the repaving of Route 3 from Weymouth to Duxbury while holding off on a plan to widen that 14.2-mile section of the highway until about 2007.

While the task force did not endorse the widening proposal, its members made a number of recommendations to help mitigate the effects of the project in the event it moves forward.

Those revolve around planning-related and construction mitigation issues, open space and aesthetic and visual impacts.

"We felt the character of the area should be maintained," Kelsch said. "We don't want it to look like Route 1. More input is needed on how to develop along Route 3 or we'll see massive development like that which has already occurred on the way to Cape Cod."

Despite some differing opinions among task force members, a consensus was reached on several issues relating to the widening proposal:

• Impacts of major residential development further south in the region and the impact of the current condition of the Braintree split need to be included in the needs analysis.

"If nothing is done about the clog in the drain, why build a bigger pipe leading to the clog?" the task force draft report notes.

The widening proposal does not address that controversial area.

• Master plans must be developed within local communities, with the assistance of the state if necessary, to prepare for the impact of major transportation projects;

• A comprehensive transportation plan must be agreed upon by the state and local communities so future plans and zoning regulations can be made and issued in anticipation of transportation developments. Regional transportation should come from and be further encouraged by the state; and

• More emphasis should be placed on transportation alternatives.

Should the widening project move forward in the years ahead, task force members agreed unanimously that storm-water management, improvements to offsite intersections and roadways within the corridor, upgrades on all Route 3 interchanges and High Occupancy Vehicle (HOV) lanes should be considered.

The task force also emphasized the importance of the aesthetic impacts such a project would have and the need to mitigate those by preserving the median strip, protecting "important vistas" and creating and implementing a comprehensive landscaping plan, with special consideration accorded the North River Bridge and vista.

Once the final draft is finished, the work of the task force will come to an end, but task force members are recommending the formation of a citizens advisory committee to ensure continued participation in the process.

Stephen Kelsch of Mallard Run and Town Administrator Charles Cristello represented Hingham on the Route 3 Land Development Task Force.

Olde fashioned picnic basket auction

The Cohasset Historical Society announces an "Olde Fashioned Picnic Basket Auction," fundraising event, Sept. 8 at 1 p.m. at the Lothrop House at 14 Summer St.

Bring a creative picnic lunch for two to be auctioned off to the highest bidder. Then join the festivities by successfully bidding on and enjoying the picnic lunch of your choice. Suggestions include:

• In addition to lunch, customize your basket with an enticing extra, such as gift certificates, lottery tickets, free lessons, specialty items. The more creative the basket, the bigger the donation to the historical society.

• Basket essentials: appetizers/soup, sandwiches, munchies (veggies, chips), salad (pasta, Caesar, fruit), dessert, disposable utensils, dishes, napkins.

• Attach a note to the outside of your basket. Specify your basket's menu items and any special features so that the auctioneer can "sell" its virtues to the audience.

• Bring a blanket or lawn chair.

• Beverages will be provided by the society.

Don't forget, this is a fund-raiser — the more attractive the basket, the higher the bidding will go.

Exhibit stirs childhood memories

By Constance Gorfinkle
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

If the objects in the Exhibition Room of the Old Ordinary on Lincoln Street in Hingham weren't arranged so artfully, one could imagine he or she had stepped into someone's attic, where beloved toys of childhood lay waiting to stir long-forgotten memories. Dolls, more than a century old, books touting the moral ideals of another age, and a cunning toy made of wood, structured so that a marble can clatter down its slanted sides with a satisfying racket, summon up images of the simple existence once enjoyed by children who could indulge their imaginations free of the insidious influences exercised by today's electronic gadgets.

These are some of the pieces on display through Sept. 8 at the Old Ordinary, the house museum in downtown Hingham owned and operated by the Hingham Historical Society, in an exhibition called appropriately enough "The Children's Hour." Organized by Susan Zuger, a member of the society, the exhibition gives insight into a time when children minded their p's and q's, and, on Sundays, could play only with their miniature versions of Noah's Ark because more frivolous playthings might distract them from the contemplation of their moral responsibilities.

Among the items are those that were made by members of the Tower Toy Guild, a cooperative composed of Hingham artisans whose wares were sold throughout the region in the 19th century. Over time, many of the pieces that came out of the Tower Toy Guild have been donated to the Hingham Historical Society, which now has a good-sized collection of these works.

Several of those are in the current show, such as "this charming little, solid, painted church, with a weathervane on top in the shape of a fish," pointed out Zuger recently to a visitor to the exhibition.

Moving on to other items, Zuger indicated "a little, Native American doll that is in our collection. And this toy birch bark canoe dates from the early '20s. I know that," she laughed, "because it's mine.

"It's just fortuitous that these two pieces go together," she continued about the doll and the canoe.

Also, in the same area of the exhibition are some tiny terra cotta dishes that had been made by Native Americans, explained Zuger.

Interesting to note in the exhibition is how the dolls little girls played with long ago weren't cuddly baby lookalikes, or Barbie-type glamour fantasies. Instead, they were little-women replicas whose no-nonsense demeanors were meant to represent the serious, responsible housewives and mothers the little girls would one day become.

Boys, on the other hand, were allowed to be more fanciful in their play, as demonstrated by the toy weapons they brandished as they pretended to be soldiers. A modern parent would blanch at the lethal quality of the sharp little swords they would wave at one another. A more benign toy is a small drum beautifully rendered and in impeccable condition.

The books in the exhibition reveal how children in earlier centuries always were receiving instructions on how to live righteous lives. No matter how exciting the story, a moral nugget had to be at its center.

"The Children's Hour" is a delightful glimpse into a time of innocence before commercialism had begun to dictate how our children would spend the precious hours of childhood.

The Old Ordinary is at 21 Lincoln St. Hours are 1:30 to 4:30 p.m., Tuesday through Saturday. Admission is $3 for adults and $1 for children under 12. For group tours or more information, call 781-749-1851.

Turning it around

High turnout boosts optimism for girls soccer team

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

One year removed from a dismal season, the Cohasset High girls soccer program is looking to turn itself around.

When head coach Deb Beal took over the team four years ago, she had 26 participants come out. This year, she has seen that total nearly double, as 48 female athletes turned out looking to put some wins on the board for a team that has not done that too often in recent years.

"We had a huge turnout," said Beal, who reluctantly admits she will be forced to make some cuts. "We are just going to see who sticks it out."

In order to see who can stick it out, Beal has stepped up the fitness training of her team, beginning each practice with a three mile run, then moving into sprints. She also had 14 players weight train with her all summer, proving the motivation of the squad.

Leading the way for this motivated team will be a trio of senior captains: Maggie O'Neill, Kate Grimm and Carlie Carter.

A returning South Shore League All-Star who led the team in scoring last year, O'Neill has spent the past 10 months playing club soccer and competing in tournaments.

Grimm, a left-footed forward who will also see some time at midfield, adds experience and speed to the offensive side of the ball.

Unfortunately, Carter, one of the best defenders for the 2000 team, will be unable to participate this year because of a knee injury she suffered in the 2000-01 winter gymnastics season. Still, she has been doing all the running and plyometrics she can, hoping her dedication will rub off on the many underclassmen represented on the team.

"I call her my assistant coach," laughed Beal.

Carter will be sorely missed at the defensive end, but juniors Yasmine Afshar and Julie Lordan appear quite capable of helping to compensate for the loss.

Afshar has been moved from sweeper to stopper this year to encourage her offensive tendencies, and Lordan is a proven varsity defender, capable of filling the right outside back position well.

Sophomore Holly Graham will be new to the varsity defensive scene, hoping to provide protection for junior goalie Kelly Holway.

Henry skippers way to national crown

Cohasset Yacht Club crew takes top prize at national 210 sailing championships

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Charlie Henry can still remember the sense of excitement and exhilaration he felt watching the national sailing championships in Cohasset Harbor with his father as a young boy.

So you can probably imagine how the 32-year old Cohasset native felt last week when he captured the National 210 Sailing Championships, held last week at the South Boston Yacht Club.

"Yeah, obviously, it was pretty exciting," said Henry, with a laugh. "I guess you could say it really was the realization a lifelong dream."

Henry, a Cohasset Yacht Club member who now lives in Duxbury, captained the 30-foot 210 class boat "4" with his two man crew of Adam Durant and Eric Crews, chums who have been there for the long and short of his sailing career: Durant a rival dating back to their pre-teen years as members of the Cohasset Sailing Club, Crews a sailing team mate at St. Mary's University (Maryland).

Henry and crew finished 12th in the field of 26 on the opening day race, Aug. 21. They bounced back to take a first, two seconds and two thirds in the remaining five races held on the 23rd and 24th. Throwing out their worst finish, as permitted, these five high finishes were good enough to secure the top spot with a low point total of 10.75.

Henry edged out last year's winner, Mike Blackwood, of Milwaukee, who finished second with 14.5 points (two first places, a third and two fifth places). A pair of Hingham captains— John Matthews and Sue Epstein—finished third and fourth, with 22 and 22.75 points, respectively.

This was Henry's third year competing in the 210 Nationals. In 1999, he finished ninth with the Cohasset Yacht Club hosting the event. Last year, he and the crew traveled to the Gull Lake Yacht Club in Kalamazoo, Michigan, where they finished third.

"It was a nice progression for us," said Henry, who manages veterinary clinics in Buzzards Bay and Dedham. "It's rewarding to see how our hard work paid off."

SSL football appears wide open

Cohasset gridders eye improvement

By Mike Spellman and Julie Ann Nevero
MARINER SPORTS EDITORS

Carver and Norton dominated the South Shore League a year ago, but both teams have been decimated by graduations. The result, at least by appearances, is a wide open division.

Abington, Hull and Cohasset were also hit hard by senior losses. The key losses continue to pile up for Cohasset, with news coming now that senior captain Nick Bolster, a deadly return man and wing back last season, will miss the entire season after surgery to repair a detached retina.

South Shore League – 2000 Final Standings

	League	Overall
Carver	5-1	9-1
Norton	5-1	9-1
Hull	4-2	7-3
Abington	3-3	4-5
Hanover	2-4	5-5
Cohasset	1-5	5-5
Norwell	1-5	5-6

* New to the South Shore League this season is Mashpee (Last in the Patriot League at 0-6, 0-10 overall in 2000). Gone from the SSL is Hanover, who will move up to the PL this season.

Norwell, a team that dominated the SSL for much of 90's, will look to bounce back from a disappointing 5-6 season, with only one of those wins coming in league play. Injuries and graduations took a heavy toll on the Clippers last season, but veteran coach Jim Sullivan is looking to build around his strong core of linemen and an infusion of young athletes.

One SSL team that appeared last season to be building toward bigger and better things with a new coach and several returning key players, Hanover, has moved up in division to the Patriot League as part of the Pilgrim Conference's four year realignment plan. The Indians swap leagues with Mashpee, which enters the SSL off of an 0-10 2000 campaign (0-6 in the Patriot League).

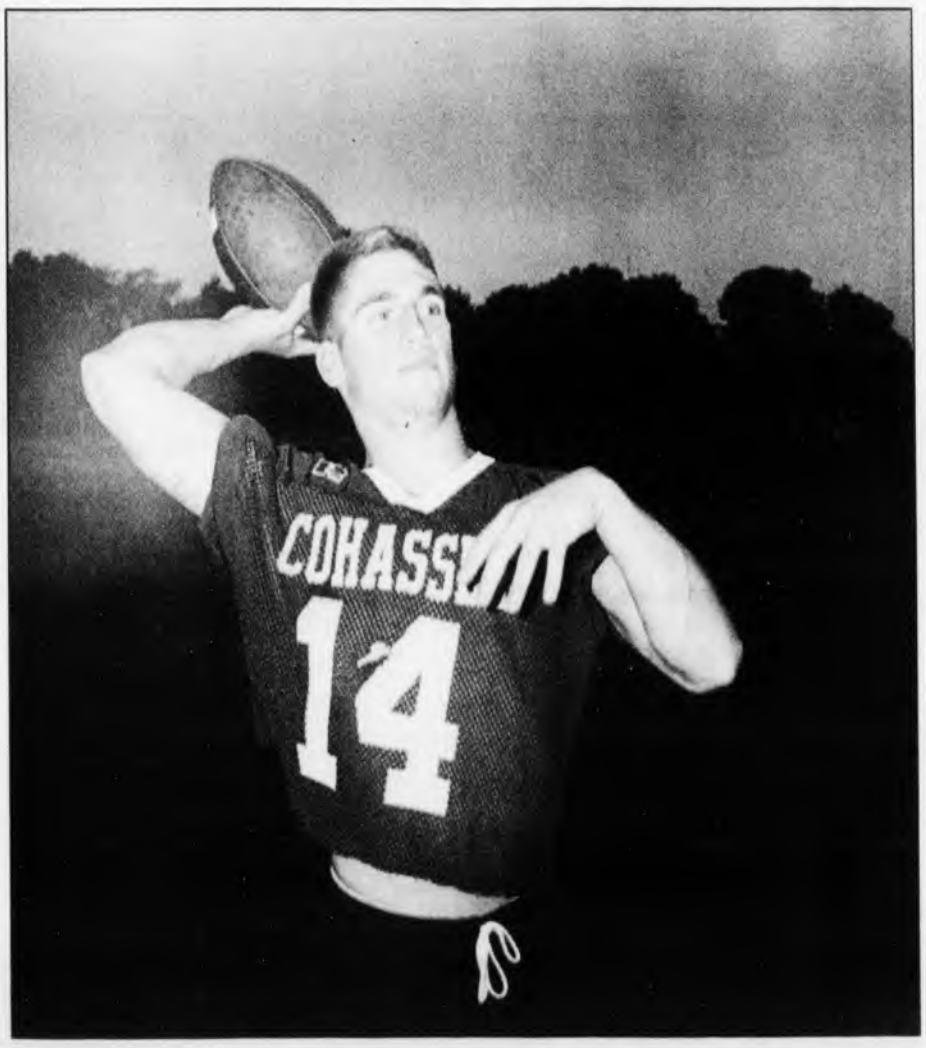
"I don't think there'll be any real surprises in the first few weeks," offered fourth year Cohasset High head coach Tony Rolfe. "With all of the graduations, it's real tough to figure who might emerge as the top few teams. I think Norwell should be better, and I think we might do well with a few breaks here or there. I also think Carver is going to be better than some people think. They lost a lot, but they've got a lot of kids to draw from."

Norwell

After several years of being the class of the SSL, Norwell took its lumps last season, as graduations, injuries and revenge-minded rivals all contributed to a last place finish (1-6 in league).

One of the most pressing matters for veteran coach Jim Sullivan will be replacing his entire starting backfield on offense—with quarterback John MacKenzie and halfback Mike Mohan lost to graduation, and fullback Steve Williams transferring to Deerfield Academy.

Mohan missed five games last season with a knee injury, which gave John Coleman plenty of opportunity to grow accustomed to the lead back role that now appears to be his to lose. The 6-foot-170 pound senior flashed some nice elusiveness and burst last season, and Coach Sullivan says that he appears much stronger this season. Junior Brendan Feldstein, the leading ball carrier with last year's 6-4 JV team, should push Coleman.



There is also competition at quarterback—sophomore John Mohan (Mike's brother and last year's JV starter) and junior Steve Sullivan—and fullback— junior Joe Doyle and sophomore Andrew Farinick, a couple of hard hitting 6-feet-175 pounders. This is the type of situation Coach Sullivan likes to see.

"Competition is almost always a good thing," said the 13th year head coach. "These kids are all competitive, so you hope it brings out the best in all of them."

What his team lacks in experience at the skill positions, Sullivan hopes to make up for in sheer athleticism. Based on what he's seen in the first week of practice, Sullivan believes this could be one of his most athletic teams ever, top to bottom.

And it's not like the team is hurt-

Golf team looks to overcome losses

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Losing five of the previous season's top six contributors is never a good way to start an athletic campaign. So, if nothing else, you've got to give Cohasset High's fall golf coach Torin Sweeney high marks for positive thinking.

"We have somewhat of a new group," conceded Sweeney. "That is what will be the challenge."

The primary reason for the "new group" is the change in season. Last school year, the golf season fell in the spring, but this year Cohasset and the rest of South Shore League have moved to the fall.

Because of the switch, Cohasset's golf team has been decimated, with several key duffers already having made commitments to other fall sports.

Formerly the number one, Will Prendergast, one of the top players in the area, and number three David Bouchard will be playing their senior years on the football team.

Last spring's number two player, senior Jay Bertovich, will play soccer for a very strong playoff contending team.

The team also lost their number four, Ted Gledhill, to graduation, and the number five/six, Rob Lehr, is still recovering from shoulder surgery.

Despite the losses, Cohasset is left with what could be a very competitive team in the SSL.

Though it may seem that the seasonal switch has brought nothing but misfortune to the Skippers, it is not a completely negative happening for the Blue.

"Fall is going to be a fun season

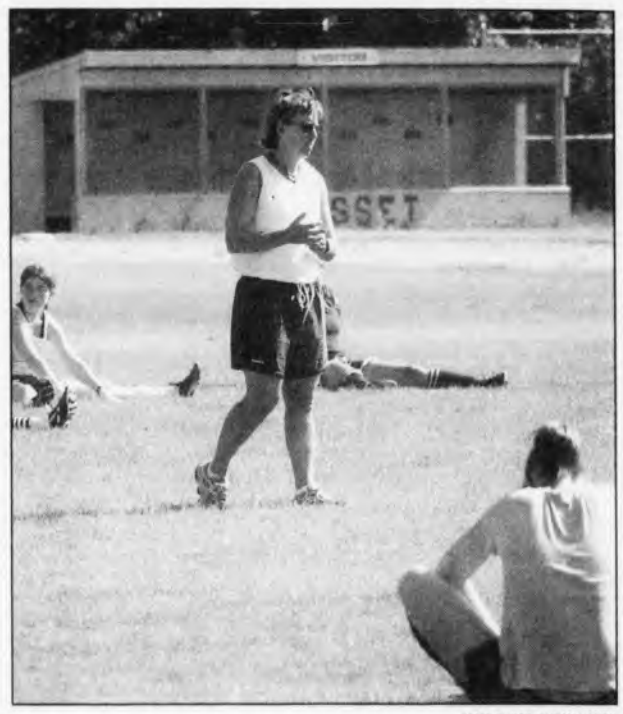
Holway performed well last year in the eyes of her coach, and she has worked hard recently to improve her skills.

"She put in two solid weeks of camp," lauded Beal. "She has also worked on her own to improve her reaction speed."

Sophomores Marisa Mellow and Brittany Novak will be battling out for the back-up goalie position for the next few weeks until the start of the season.

Although this is the first time since 1998 there has been no question over who would play goalie, Beal said the main problem in recent years has been the inability of her team to control the middle of the field. Fortunately, she sees reason for optimism on that front as she prepares for the campaign.



"We have some young kids who can run and dominate the midfield," observed the coach.

Among those fleet afoot newcomers are sophomores Jen Buckley, Nicole Turgiss and Brenna O'Donnell. Speedster sophomore Gillian Weber will be playing in her second year as a varsity forward.

Another area that Beal said her team needs to work on is finishing. Too many times last year, she noted, her team squandered offensive opportunities.

To help in that category, Beal may have a handful of offensive-minded freshmen swing between the varsity and junior varsity squads, namely Casey Anderson, Danielle Hajjar, Molly Kirk, Kate Englander and Mackenzie Holway.

Last year, Cohasset started off the season with a crushing 7-0 loss to Hanover, a game Beal feels that the team never quite recovered from. But with the Indians out of the league, the Lady Skippers will open their season against Norwell (Sept. 11), who they lost to twice last year, losing both games by one goal.

Coby's Run a hit again

Scituate race tops $100,000 mark in its sixth year

JoeReardon
CORRESPONDENT

Jamie Gallagher reached the mile mark of the Coby's Run 10K in a cool 4:55, the rest of the pack unable to keep pace with the Hull resident, a wisp in the background. Gallagher's game plan was perfectly clear: build the big lead to discourage any pretenders and cruise uncontested over the second half of the scenic course that follows Scituate Harbor and several of the town's quaint neighborhoods.

Gallagher's strategy was still working to perfection after racing by the 2-mile mark in 10:16, the 5K in 15:55. Given the fact that it was Gallagher's third race of the week, he felt surprisingly fresh through the halfway point, save for a slight upset stomach.

"I felt really comfortable," said Gallagher, winner of last Thursday's Jane's Chase Beach Race. "It was good because I was able to relax. I was surprised by the splits. It didn't feel like a 4:55 first mile. I did have a little stomach ache but there was no one in sight. Thank God."

Gallagher slowed, but never suffered a complete breakdown over the final 5K to win his first Coby's Run in his first attempt with a time of 34-minutes flat.

The race is held in memory of Coby Cutler, a 1995 graduate of Scituate High School, who died the summer after his graduation after being struck by lightning while conducting a rifle-range drill at the Marine training center at Parris Island, SC. Proceeds from the race will go towards the construction of the PVT. Coby M. Cutler Memorial Fitness Center at the high school. More than $95,000 has been raised since the event's debut six years ago. This year's race was expected to put the total raised for the fitness center over $100,000.

Dozens of sponsors and local businesses donated gift certificates and prizes for the top finishers and a raffle was also held. The course itself is a tough one, known specifically for the hellish climb up Beaver Dam Road in the final half mile of both the 10 and 5K.

Gallagher said he was very much aware of the hill at the end and wanted to conserve his strength for the final ascent to the finish at the Gates Intermediate School.

"It's not too bad," he said. "But it comes just when you're hurting the most."

Ironically, Gallagher planned to use the race as a training run after a racing season that started nearly nine months ago. He had a change of heart when he arrived, a mere 10 minutes before the start.

"I thought the race started at 10," he said with a laugh. "That was my warm-up, a sprint to my car and back."

Gallagher ran 70 and 50 miles the previous two weeks before the race, but admitted his training the week of the race was a little lean.

"I'm just taking it down now and want to build it back up for the Boston half marathon in October," he said. "It's going to be tough. I have to resist the temptation of racing."

Women's winner Shannon Siragusa was concerned with her fast start over the first half mile but settled down and ran comfortably through the opening mile in 6:10. Siragusa's long-term goal of making her marathon debut in the Cape Cod Marathon was one of the reasons behind competing in her first Coby's Run. She was well in the clear at 5K (19:15) and chugged up the final hill to take 13th overall in 40:22.

"This is the first race I've run in about five years," said Siragusa, a Boston College alumnus. "I just wanted to see what kind of time I could get. The start is really fast and I was afraid of going out too fast."

Siragusa said the race was well run and enjoyed the overall setting.

"It's such a pretty area around here," she said. "It's a nice race. I'd like to run it next year too."

Siragusa was one of those rare runners who actually felt strong heading up Beaver Dam Road.

"Right before it there's a slight downhill," she said. "I felt good going into it. Your adrenaline gets you through it because you're so close to the end."

In the 5K event, Quincy's Chris Fitzgerald topped the 219-runner field in 17:16 and Lucy Canavan of Marshfield won the women's division with a time of 20:03, good for 13th overall.

Henry skippers way to national crown

Charlie and his father, William Henry, started the Cohasset High sailing team many years ago. Charlie went on to attend Brewster Academy in New Hampshire before moving on to St. Mary's. He was a team member and captain of both schools' sailing teams.

In addition to several East Coast and local entrants—from yacht clubs in Falmouth, Hingham, Hull, Quincy, Boston and Gloucester, among others—several boats and crews from the Great Lakes states made the trek to participate in the Nationals.

The 210 races are among the oldest and most honored in U.S. sailing circles. The sleek racing boat measures 30 feet in length and six feet across. "4" is owned by Cohasset's John Keane.

"I thank John every time he lets me sail it," said Henry. "I'm really going to be thanking him now every time I see him for a while."

ing for experience, particularly in comparison to the rest of the SSL. In fact, the Clippers lost only two of its starting from six up front on offense. Senior captains Tim Hunt and Tom Hammonds return to start at center and right guard, respectively, as does junior John Chappell at right tackle. Tight end Brent Smith, another senior captain, who appeared well on his way to earning All-League honors last season before a season ending injury, is also back. The 6-foot-2-inch Smith and 6-foot-4 split end Ted Hughes should provide nice targets for whoever wins the starting quarterback job.

Hannon, Hunt, Chappell and Smith also form the core of the defensive front seven.

Cohasset

The main concerns for fourth year Cohasset head coach Tony Rolfe are on the defensive side of the ball, where the loss of leading tackler Ronan Buick at middle linebacker and top lineman Craig Davis have left some huge shoes to fill.

The coach likes the improvement shown in the early going by juniors Ben Lynner and Cosimo Cambi on the defensive line, as well as in seniors Paul Previtte at linebacker and Liam Martin in the secondary, but he sounds concerned about the depth around them.

"We're going to need some guys to step up in the next few weeks," noted Rolfe.

In the case of the offense, the coach clearly sounded more optimistic, even with the loss to graduation of 1,200-yard halfback Brian Krupczak and the removal by injury of Bolster, initially a strong candidate to succeed Krupczak as the featured back.

Rolfe's plan is to move senior captain Jason Brown from quarterback, where he started the two previous seasons, to tailback and replace him behind center with junior Mike Snowdale, the JV squad's starting quarterback last season. The 5-foot-9, 170 pound Brown had a couple of 100-yard rushing games last season while taking the snaps direct, and Rolfe sounds confident the transition to tailback for his captain will be a relatively smooth one.

Rolfe says he also believes Snowdale will make the necessary plays as his signal caller. The coach adds that having "quality receivers like (Liam) Martin and (junior) Chris Bilodeau split out should help a lot."

On the whole, Rolfe thinks his team might have a slight edge on many of the teams in the division in terms of experience.

"That's the thing about having the smallest team and smallest school in the league," said Rolfe, "everyone on your team gets some playing time. Most of our players have seen a good deal of field time, and I'm hoping that pays off."

Abington

Last year's young team got a little older this season. Comprised primarily of juniors and seniors, Abington is looking as solid as ever.

Despite the graduation losses of running back Rick Hall, linebacker Brian Kallenberg, and lineman Kyle Shepherd, coach Jim Kelliher's Green Wave team is being picked by many South Shore League coaches – and some from other leagues, as well – as a strong contender this season.

Kelliher's Green Wave is loaded with seniors. Among them is quarterback Bryan Wood, who earned the starting spot last year and will be at the post again this season for Abington. Fullback/linebacker Bob Lacerda will be a key player in the backfield for Abington.

On the defensive side of the ball, senior cornerback Mike Miller returns to his starting post, as will senior Mbela Kabongo at defensive end, and defensive back Christian Allen. Linemen Nick Hess and Tom McSharry will also be key players on defense for the Green Wave.

Last year's sophomore-dominated roster now features a slew of juniors. Among them are defensive backs Adam Bowser and Shane Crowley. Linebacker Kevin Spaulding and defensive lineman Jeffrey Walls also return.

Despite the changes in the leagues around them, the Green Wave will continue to play its Thanksgiving Day non-league opponent Whitman/Hanson (from the ACL). Other non-league matchups feature Bristol-Plymouth (Sept. 21) and cross-town rival and defending Div. 3 Super Bowl champs Rockland (Oct. 12).

Abington will open its 2001 season away at former SSL rival Hanover on Friday, Sept. 14.

to golf in," offered Sweeney, who will be in his second season as the golf coach. "The courses will be in better shape. The kids also have the opportunity to play all summer. I know at least half of them have."

Someone who has spent the summer honing his skills is senior Will Moody, who can be seen at Milliken Field at least a few times a week working on his short game. Moody likely will take Prendergast's spot, and has been named the team's captain.

Juniors Greg Griffin-O'Brien and Michael Caloiro saw some time in the top six last year, and will be a big part of this team.

There is also a possibility that seniors Tim Straughn, Matt O'Grodnik and Pete Whoriskey will play, even though they probably would not have if it were still a spring sport.

There are a few freshman joining the team as well, who will be very important to patching up the holes left by the lost players. However, Sweeney cannot be sure how they will handle the pressure of varsity play in their first years of high school.

"It will be interesting to see how they respond to it," he said.

From what Sweeney has seen of the league, Cohasset has the potential to once again make the state tourney.

Norwell is still the class of the league, with two-time defending State Champion Ben Spitz entering his senior year. But beyond that, Norton and Abington are still very young and inexperienced, while no one is sure what kind of talent Mashpee and Harwich, the new members of the SSL, have at their respective schools.

"Who knows what Mashpee and Harwich will bring to the league?" asked Sweeney.

Right now, not many people will know what Cohasset will bring to the league until they measure up with the best in their first SSL match of the season, Sept. 10 against Norwell.

Schools start amid change

By Rick Collins
Mariner Staff Writer

When Cohasset schools open their doors this Wednesday, students, parents, faculty and staff will all have to adjust to a number of changes.

Most glaring is the $41 million school construction project that has now enveloped the Deer Hill School and middle/high school and will continue to do so for the next year and a half.

"It's going to be eye-opening at the Deer Hill and middle/high school," said School Committee chairman Stephanie Noble. "We're going to have to accept that our children are going to school in a work in progress and it's not always going to look great."

Although the Deer Hill layout remains relatively intact, the middle/high school has undergone a few changes[see related story]. The library wing has been torn down as the Dorr Gymnasium now hosts both the library and art rooms. A temporary walkway connects the middle school and high school, via a walkway through the auditorium.

Both schools have also had most of its tile floors ripped up during the asbestos removal phase of the project this summer.

Project Manager Simon Tempest said with school in session the construction project will now move outside. Students will not be allowed in construction areas, and construction workers will not be allowed in school areas.

"The workers and students will never come in contact with each other," he said.

"Once students get over the initial shock of the changes, it will become very normal for them."
— School Committee chairman Stephanie Noble

As a safety precaution, Tempest said workers will wear proper identification.

School officials don't believe the changes will prove to be a hindrance for the town's students.

"Once students get over the initial shock of the changes, it will become very normal for them," said Noble. "Children are very adaptable creatures. I wish adults were so adaptable."

She added, "I'm convinced with [middle/high school principal] Dr. Michael Jones and [Deer Hill principal] Paul Callahan at the helm that education has always been the number one priority, and that they have gone through great lengths to make sure the staff is prepared to handle whatever comes up."

Callahan said parents and students should find things as they were last year.

"The only thing that's different is that there are just no tiles and no rugs," he said.

The Osgood School won't feel any effects from the school construction project, but has a major change of its own to deal with. Janet Sheehan is the school's new principal, replacing Marilee Cantelmo.

Sheehan said parents shouldn't expect any changes in basic school policy, and that any changes would be made with the guidance of the school PSO.

She said one of her goals is to make sure the school remains as clean as it can be. The cleanliness issue has been brought up at past school committee meetings, and Sheehan said she is aware of parents' concerns.

Both the Deer Hill and Osgood have made a change to their school start and end times.

Because of a problem getting buses to the Deer Hill and Osgood in time to pick students up at the end of the day, the School Committee voted last month to push back the start time 15 minutes at both schools.

School at the Deer Hill now begins at 8:35 a.m. and ends at 2:35 p.m. Osgood students will be in school from 9:05 a.m. until 3:05 p.m. Sheehan said parents may drop their children off at school after 8:55 a.m. Middle/high school times have remained the same.

The school department will also welcome 17 new teachers to its classrooms, including a new first grade teacher, new second grade teacher, seven new middle school teachers and two new high school teachers.

Students in grades 1 through 12 will report to school on Sept. 5. Kindergarten students will be split up for the first two days, with half coming to an orientation on Wednesday and half on Thursday.

"This will allow them to get acclimated in small groups," said Sheehan. "It's a bit more manageable."

Fourth-grade teachers Victoria Sullivan, right, and Jennifer Gately set up a classroom at Deer Hill.

Schools double as construction zones

Town Manger Mark Haddad has joked.

The large boulder that used to rest on the Deer Hill lawn now sits near the entrance.

Wrestling in the Dorr Gymnasium at the middle/high school will be much harder with the school library and art classrooms now relocated inside. Surprisingly, the exposed hardwood gymnasium floor with its bright red, blue and green painted lines doesn't look too out of place in the art room.

In charge of the project's daily oversight is a familiar face to town, Simon Tempest, who oversaw the Osgood School construction project. Tempest, an architect by trade who now specializes in construction management, came to the latest Cohasset school project after just having managed the multi-million dollar renovation of the Landmark Center in Boston's Fenway area.

His office, the first stop on a recent tour of the construction sites, is the former boat repair shop in the hall separating the middle school and high school. From his back door, Tempest is able to look out on just about the entire work site behind the middle/high school. Having removed 20,000 cubic yards of fill from the hill behind the school earlier this summer, workers are busy installing the rear wall of what will eventually become new classrooms and gymnasium.

From his front door, Tempest can see the staging area on the former lower field in front of the school. The hallway replacing the destroyed wing is on the left against the side of the auditorium. Students coming from the middle school will enter the walkway just past Tempest's office, walk in a weather-proof, heated walkway attached to the auditorium, enter a new hallway built in the rear of the auditorium, and out into the main building.

"We got a lot of work done," said Tempest. "We really had pretty good weather."

Traffic pattern

Parents and staff will have to deal with a new traffic pattern at the Deer Hill. The main traffic flow no longer travels in front of the school; instead vehicles will enter from Sohier Street and turn onto a new access road. Parents picking and dropping off their children will be able to take a right off the access road into the parking lot. Only buses will be permitted in front of the Deer Hill.

Deer Hill School Principal Paul Callahan said only specialization subject classrooms adjacent to the construction site will be immediately affected by the project.

"Other than that, parents and students will find everything where it was," said Callahan.

Tempest expects the new addition's steel frame to be in place by the time school starts, and enclosed by the winter. That's when the majority of work will take place.

"To people it looks like nothing is being done once the frame is up, but there's still about 60 to 70 percent of the work to do," he said. "We just move inside."

The main change at the Deer Hill involves the floor, or lack thereof.

During the school's asbestos removal, the school building committee decided to remove the asbestos-containing floor tiles immediately, rather than wait until next summer. On one hand, the school is now asbestos-free and has had its air quality checked and approved by the state. However, the school's floors are, for the most part, rough concrete.

The school building committee also decided against installing a temporary floor-covering until the interior work is done next summer.

"It would have been very expensive to do that, to carpet the entire building and then tear it up again in a year," said Tempest. "It would be burning money."

Callahan didn't think the floors would negatively impact the school's learning environment.

"It basically looks like your basement or garage floor," he said.

He also said because the school's brooms wouldn't push on the concrete floors, the schools had to invest in vacuum cleaners.

Because some halls and classroom floors were in such poor shape, contractors had to lay a new topcoat in certain areas.

Tempest said costs prohibited the schools from resurfacing all of the floors.

The majority of the middle/high school also has concrete floors, except for the main administrative hallway. Tempest said that part of the building will have its asbestos removed next summer. He added that the school is safe for students to be in health-wise.

"Anybody that has been through a home construction project knows that there are some compromises that need to be made," said Spofford. "We felt it was in the best interest of the town to take those tiles out, and instead focus on having the schools completed in a timely manner."

Overall, Spofford was very pleased with the projects' progress.

"We feel the projects are at this point on schedule and well within the budgetary amounts," he said. "We've had no major surprises to date, and that's a reflection on how well the architects [Hingham-based Strekalovsky & Hoit] had designed the plans, as well as the continued hard work of Tempest and Haddad."

"I'm very impressed by the way the project is going so far," Haddad said. "Knock on wood."

Parents with any questions, concerns or constructive comments are urged to contact the schools' principals or the School Building Committee via its Web site www.ssec.org/cohasset/buildingproject/index.htm

LIBRARY CORNER

Artist of the Month

"Super Frog," an 18x24 acrylic on canvas by Elizabeth L. Burke.

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library presents Acrylic Paintings by Elizabeth L. Burke beginning Wednesday, Aug. 29, through Wednesday, Oct. 31.

Hingham artist Betty Burke began painting in the 1960s studying with other locally known artists; Priscilla Sibley, Joe Burbank, Clement Micarelli, Rosalind Farbush and Betty Kohlberg. An award-winning artist, Burke has had many one-person and group shows throughout the South Shore and Boston including the South Shore Art Center and the Copley Society in Boston.

The prominent artist expresses her passion with bright, bold colors and loose impressionistic strokes.

"I love visual expressions of color and sunlight and the excitement and challenge of doing a new painting," Burke says. "It's like working out a puzzle and waiting for the pieces to fit into the scheme of things.

She is a member of the Scituate Arts Association, South Shore Art Center, North River Arts Society and the Copley Society of Boston where she holds the distinction of "Copley Artist", a title given to members who have exhibited work in five of the Society's juried shows.

Come in and enjoy this colorful display at the Paul Pratt Library.

Books on Tape

The library now has a variety of unabridged audiocassettes located in the room to the left of the front desk. The cassettes will be rotated on a six-week basis to allow for a broader range of books. The selection ranges from the classics, Lord Jim by Joseph Conrad to more current choices like "A Year in Provence." by Peter Mayle or "Midnight in the Garden of Good & Evil," by John Berendt.

And don't forget, the library also has a terrific selection abridged audiocassettes located in the same area. All of these are great for long car trips, plane rides or just an afternoon in the shade.

POLICE BRIEFS

Youths arrested after disturbance

Cohasset police responded to numerous reports of a large group of youths, who had apparently been partying inside Wheelwright Park, that were running through the callers' backyards and down Forest Avenue, screaming and causing a disturbance at 1:15 a.m. Thursday in the vicinity of Forest Avenue and Heather Drive.

An 18-year-old Scituate youth, whom police said was intoxicated, allegedly threw a cooler of beer at a police officer, breaking several of the bottles, and tried to run away all the while yelling obscenities at the officer, according to the police report.. A chase ensued and the suspect, Craig M. Sheerin of 8 Trudy's Lane, Scituate, eventually got himself trapped between a house and a fenced-in yard. At that point, the officer was forced to tackle Sheerin to the ground. In the scuffle, the officer's uniform pants were ripped beyond repair and the officer sustained a cut to his right leg, police said.

While officers were securing Sheerin, they were called to Heather Drive by a resident for an intoxicated girl who had entered his home, police said. The girl, Kathleen McCarthy, 18, of 155 Fair Oaks Lane in Cohasset, had only one shoe and mud and water stains on her pants up to her knees. Police said McCarthy, who admitted to having been drinking, tried to elude police by running through backyards. She told police she didn't know what to do, so she entered a stranger's home looking to hide from the officers, according to the police report.

McCarthy was charged with being a disorderly person and disturbing the peace. Both charges were continued without a finding for three months prior to arraignment Thursday at Quincy District Court, which means if McCarthy stays out of trouble, the charges will be dropped at that time. She was required to pay $170 in court costs.

Sheerin was charged with being a disorderly person, disturbing the peace, resisting arrest and wanton destruction of property valued at $250 or less. He is scheduled to return to Quincy District Court for a pre-trial hearing at 9 a.m., Oct. 15.

Forget about bars, the personal pages, and all those names in your little black books. The latest love craze known as 8-Minute Dating is on its way to the South Shore.

Starting Sept. 11, the X&O European Trattoria in Quincy will host the first 8-Minute Dating session in the area. The event will be held every other Tuesday at the restaurant through Nov. 20.

"It's a big craze right now across the country," said Rebecca Hancock, a spokesperson for the X&O Trattoria. "Basically, 8-Minute Dating provides a good alternative for people who don't feel like dealing with the club scene."

Hancock said people can sign up for the program at the Web site www.8minutedating.net.

"After you sign up, show up to the event on Sept. 11, and the MC will explain what's going on," Hancock said. She explained those who sign up will be given three different kinds of cards on their arrival — a card with a code number on it, a table assignment card, and an 8-Minute Dating card to make notes or jot down names. They will also be given a list of eight different potential love interests.

"It's very new to me. It's kind of like musical chairs but it's musical dating instead."
Mary Gregoriades

During the course of the evening, each person involved in the program will have the opportunity to sit at different tables with those eight different prospective "dates." People will be timed during their respective conversations. They will have only eight minutes to talk before having to move on to the next table and the next person.

Hancock said when all is said and done, each participant will have met a good number of people in a single night, but then the people at 8-Minute Dating take care of the next step — playing matchmaker over the Internet.

After they have taken part in the event, participants can actually enter the code number of the person they are interested in, and find out if that individual shows mutual interest or not.

"If someone feels the same way about another person, the people at 8-Minute Dating will set up an official date," Hancock said. "It's a really neat program, and it's not some meat-market atmosphere. It's safe and civilized. People are welcome to either come by themselves or in groups."

8-Minute Dating has already been popular in cities like New York and Seattle, and it has also been written up in Boston Magazine. In addition, it has been featured on popular television shows like Frasier and HBO's Sex and the City.

8-Minute Dating is also a good alternative to not only the club scene, but to the singles pages and other dating services which tend to be cost hundreds of dollars.

"With other dating services, people have to watch a lot of videos, pay a lot of money, and do a lot of waiting," Whitten-Bunszel said. She added with 8-Minute Dating, it only costs $33.88 to take part.

"There's so much potential in meeting someone you click with," Hancock said. "There's nothing to lose and everything to gain." She added at each 8-Minute Dating session, there will be an average of 80 people in attendance, half males, half females. Typically, the service is for 25-35 year olds, but Hancock said it would be nice to have certain events for older people as well.

Tom Jaffee, the CEO and founder of 8-Minute Dating he's been very satisfied with the success of the program.

"People just seem to have a great time with it," he said. "We're starting to roll it out into cities everywhere. I think one of the reasons people like it so much it because there's really no pretense or bravado involved."

Manos Gregoriades and his mother Mary, owners of the X&O Trattoria, are also very enthusiastic about hosting the event. Manos will actually be acting as emcee for all of the different sessions.

"We think it's going to be a fun-loving atmosphere," Manos said. "At the same time, we're excited to expand it to people who wouldn't normally come to the restaurant. On the South Shore, there's not many ways to meet a lot of people. Usually, people end up having to go to Boston.

"It's very new to me," Mary said. "It's kind of like musical chairs but it's musical dating instead."

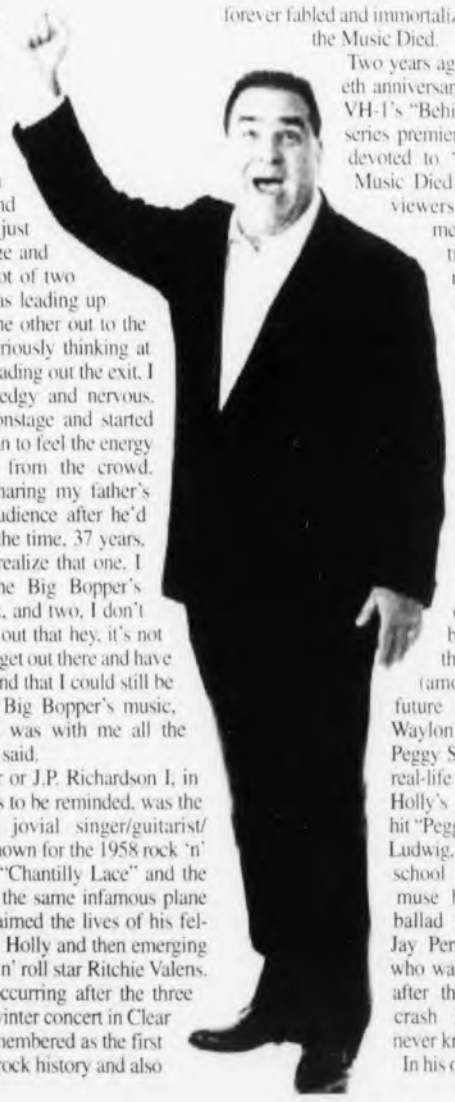
Big Bopper Jr. rocks the fair

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Jay Perry Richardson stepped onstage as the Big Bopper Jr. with not just slight trepidation for the first time in September 1996. Five years later, the singer/guitarist's reverent tribute act to his late, famed father has become a full-time occupation, with more than sixty national concert dates a year.



Richardson brought the act to the local area last Saturday, when he lit up the bill at WATD's "Yesterday's Memories" live oldies shows, emceed by "Memories" show hosts George Denham and Ed Bowen, at the Marshfield Fair. The fairgrounds concerts also featured headliner Freddy "Boom Boom" Cannon and local oldies cover band Brook Street, with another area oldies cover band, Wing It, plus Boston area, doo-wop era vocal group the Five G's, added to the afternoon show. The evening show was broadcast live on WATD, 95.9 FM.

Backed up by Brook Street, the Big Bopper Jr. carried the memory of his late father well before a large and excited fairgrounds turnout. Decked out in a glistening silk, leopard-spot jacket just like that the original Bopper wore, Richardson delivered afternoon and evening sets highlighting some of the best singing and songwriting gems of his father's career. Bopper Jr. recreated his father's act with reverence, but also lived up to his true spirit of loose and carefree good times.

"I started doing a nostalgic tribute act to my father to open for Fabian at some oldies shows, and I have to say that in the beginning I was skeptical about it at best," said Richardson, 41, by phone from his suburban Houston home the previous week. "I was not a professional musician and never performed live onstage until I was 37. But I had been really beginning to learn about my father and digging for information about who he really was, not just as a rock 'n' roller and musician but as a person, since I was about 28."

"The first show was at a theatre in South Carolina, and I remember being just about to go onstage and standing at the foot of two stairwells. One was leading up to the stage and the other out to the exit, and I was seriously thinking at that moment of heading out the exit. I was feeling that edgy and nervous. But when I got onstage and started playing I just began to feel the energy and appreciation from the crowd. That feeling of sharing my father's music with the audience after he'd been gone for, at the time, 37 years, made me finally realize that one, I can't truly fill the Big Bopper's shoes, so to speak, and two, I don't have to. I figured out that hey, it's not brain surgery, just get out there and have a good time. I found that I could still be me and play the Big Bopper's music, and the audience was with me all the way," Richardson said.

The Big Bopper or J.P. Richardson I, in case anyone needs to be reminded, was the booming-voiced, jovial singer/guitarist/songwriter best known for the 1958 rock 'n' roll/R&B classic "Chantilly Lace" and the next year died in the same infamous plane crash that also claimed the lives of his fellow Texan Buddy Holly and then emerging 17-year-old rock 'n' roll star Ritchie Valens. The fatal crash occurring after the three singers played a winter concert in Clear Lake, Iowa, is remembered as the first major tragedy of rock history and also forever fabled and immortalized as The Day the Music Died.

Two years ago, on the fortieth anniversary of the crash, VH-1's "Behind the Music" series premiered its episode devoted to "The Day the Music Died." Here, many viewers nationwide met for the first time a cast of real-life characters —family, friends, bandmates and musicians, all reminiscing on the lives and deaths of Holly, Valens and the Big Bopper. These included members of Holly's backing band the Crickets (among them, future country star Waylon Jennings), Peggy Sue Gerron, the real-life inspiration of Holly's classic rockin' hit "Peggy Sue," Donna Ludwig, Valens' high-school girlfriend and muse behind his hit ballad "Donna," and Jay Perry Richardson, who was born 84 days after the tragic plane crash in 1959 and never knew his father.

In his on-camera comments contained in the VH-1 program, Richardson remembers the period of his life when he began his long-term search into discovering who his father was. "I started asking questions, and wasn't being given answers," he recalls. What Richardson did find out eventually, among other things, was that the Big Bopper was far from just a party-hearty, rock 'n' roll novelty-type act famous for songs like "Chantilly Lace" and "The Purple People Eaters" among others. The junior J.P. emphasizes that even before Richardson had adopted the comedic Big Bopper character, he had been a modestly successful country/rockabilly singer, writing most of his own material and, most notably, penning and originally recording "White Lightning," the hit record that launched the career of country singer George Jones.

It was with this song that Bopper Jr. kicked off his sets in rockin' fashion last Saturday. Selections that followed conveyed the singer's ongoing commitment to showcasing the diversity of his father's music during his shortened career, ranging from the characteristically rootsy, such as the rockabilly swaying "That's Love" and the gospel-flavored "Someone Watching Over You," to the characteristically fun and goofy, such as "Big Bopper's Wedding." Of course, Richardson closed both sets with "Chantilly Lace," complete with his father's famous onstage "Hellooo Baby!" phone routine.

"I found that I could still be me and play the Big Bopper's music, and the audience was with me all the way."
Jay Perry Richardson
A.K.A. Big Bopper Jr.

Freddie "Boom Boom" Cannon rollicked with equal excitement through his sets which covered all his fondly remembered and rockin' early 60s hits, "Tallahasie Lassie," "Palisades Park," "Where the Action Is" and others. Cannon, a Revere native now living in California, turned 60 last year. Though graying and occasionally falling a tad flat on the high notes, the singer proved that he's lost none of the onstage energy and enthusiasm remembered in his heyday.

But the day's biggest surprise for the novice oldies-rock fan Saturday was the afternoon set by vocal doo-woppers the Five G's. A Boston-based vocal group from the original early 60s doo-wop era, the G's formed as the trio the Three G's by the brothers Ron, Al and Ed Gates during the era, and enjoyed notable area success with steady club dates and a regional 1963 hit single with "I Think I Know," while eventually adding new members to become Five.

Backed up by Wing It, the current reunited G's, including Ron and Al Gates, Jim Roberson and Al Feetham, delivered a smooth-harmonizing set under the midday sun including "I Think I Know" and other vintage originals penned by group leader Ron Gates, plus doo-wopified renditions of bigger-artist hits of the early 60s, such as Del Shannon's "Runaway" and country singer Jim Reeves' "He'll Have To Go."

Richardson has most recently begun writing and playing some of his own country-based music and is planning to head into the studio with his own band to cut original tracks next month. Cure the summertime garden blues

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

In August, when the thrill of planting the spring garden is long gone and one is faced with a discouraging abundance of large, rather dull vegetables, one is faced with the problem of how to prepare them yet again or send them packing to the compost bin.

Zucchini is perhaps the worst offender, and, having grated them for breads and cakes, I find I prefer to simply sauté or stuff them. The trick in stuffing is to prebake them. I tested this and found that simply stuffing and then baking results in a soggy texture. There is nothing sacred about the stuffing recipe, but I have found that strong flavors, such as the anchovies and capers, are important, since the vegetable itself offers more texture than it does flavor. A strong flavored cheese would also work nicely as a flavoring ingredient.

Sautéing either zucchini or yellow squash is a problem for many home cooks, due to the high water content of the vegetables. To solve this problem, I simply salt the sliced vegetable and let it sit in a colander for a half-hour. This dramatically improves the results, giving one a more meaty, less damp texture.

Finally, green tomatoes are abundant in August and are indeed worth trying. (I have tried just about every other approach, including pickling, stuffing, baking and using them for pasta sauces, but with little luck.) The secret is to use cornmeal instead of flour; this provides crunch. I have also tested buttermilk against milk, and the former provides a bit more flavor and a slightly thicker coating. Only a half-cup of oil is used, most of it remaining in the pan, so this is not a terribly unhealthy preparation. One can use hard red tomatoes for this recipe as well.

Master recipe for stuffed zucchini

Although this zucchini recipe takes a bit of work, it is one of the better ways of preparing this garden "weed." The stuffing has lots of flavor, and the baked zucchini isn't watery or bland due to the prebaking.

2 medium zucchini (1 1/2 to 2 pounds)
3 tablespoons olive oil
1 tablespoon unsalted butter
1 cup onion, chopped
1/2 cup red bell pepper, chopped
1 tablespoon anchovies, minced
2 garlic cloves, minced
2 cups country bread, finely chopped or ground into coarse crumbs
1 cup lightly packed basil, chopped
2 tablespoons capers
1/4 cup imported olives, pitted and chopped
1 large egg
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

1. Heat oven to 450 degrees. Trim ends off zucchini, cut in half lengthwise and then using a one-teaspoon measuring spoon, scoop out the center of each half, leaving about a 1/2-inch shell. Chop the scooped out flesh and reserve. Brush the outside of each zucchini half using 1 tablespoon of the olive oil and roast, skin side down, until barely tender, about 12 minutes. Remove zucchini from the oven and reduce temperature to 350 degrees.

2. Meanwhile, heat the remaining 2 tablespoons olive oil and butter in a large iron skillet over medium-high heat. When the foam subsides, add the onion, pepper and anchovies. Reduce heat to medium and cook for about 8 minutes or until very soft and lightly browned. Add the reserved zucchini and sauté for 3 minutes. Add the garlic and cook 1 additional minute. Remove from heat and transfer contents of skillet to a large bowl.

3. Add remaining ingredients along with plenty of salt and pepper to taste. Mix thoroughly (this is best done with your hands) to be sure that the egg is incorporated. Stuff the zucchini halves and bake in heated oven for 20 minutes or until the stuffing is golden brown and firm to the touch. Serves 4

Master recipe for sauté of zucchini or summer squash

This is a very simple recipe, but one that all cooks should have in their repertoire given the abundance of zucchini in the summer. By salting the zucchini and letting it drain in a colander, much of the excess water is removed, which dramatically improves this dish.

1 pound zucchini or summer squash
2 teaspoons salt
2 tablespoons high-quality olive oil
1 tablespoon butter
1 clove garlic, minced
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
1/4 cup chopped fresh flat-leaf parsley or a combination of fresh herbs such as basil, tarragon, thyme, etc.
Freshly ground black pepper

1. Slice zucchini into half-inch thick rounds, and discard the ends. Place in a colander, and sprinkle with the salt. Toss to coat evenly. Leave for 30 minutes, and shake the colander occasionally.

2. Heat a heavy skillet or medium-high heat. Add the olive oil and butter. When butter stops foaming, add the garlic and sauté for 1 minute. Add the zucchini. Cook, stirring frequently, for 5-7 minutes until the zucchini is light brown, tender but not mushy. Remove from heat.

3. Add the parsley or other fresh herbs and the freshly ground black pepper. Stir to combine. Serve hot or at room temperature. Serves 6 as a side dish.

Master recipe for fried green tomatoes

I have tried ripening green tomatoes by wrapping each tomato in newspaper, placing them in large paper bags and storing them in the basement for a few days. This does work up to a point, but the tomatoes are still lacking in flavor. (That's why I have converted to growing yellow cherry tomatoes, which ripen quickly on the vine and have plenty of fragrant tomato flavor.) That said, green tomatoes are worth eating fried. This recipe also works with hard red tomatoes, the sort one finds most of the year in supermarkets.

4 green (or hard red) tomatoes
1 cup cornmeal
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon sugar
1 teaspoon dried oregano or 2 teaspoons fresh, chopped
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
1/2 cup buttermilk or milk
1/2 cup canola or olive oil

1. Wash and dry tomatoes. Remove the stem area using a sharp paring knife. Cut into slices about 1/4-inch thick.

2. Mix together cornmeal, salt, sugar, oregano and a few turns of freshly ground black pepper in a large, heavy plastic bag. Pour buttermilk or milk into a bowl. Heat a 10-inch cast iron skillet. When hot, add the oil.

3. Dip slices one at a time in the buttermilk, and then toss with the cornmeal mixture in the bag. Only prepare as many slices as can be accommodated in the skillet at one time. Fry over medium heat, turning once when slices are golden. Drain on paper towels or paper bags and sprinkle with additional salt to taste. Serve at once. Serves 4 to 6.

Uncommon trees and shrubs for the landscape

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

During the latter half of August, even a brief leave of absence from your garden enables those sneaky little weeds to launch a major invasion. They grow by leaps and bounds and in what seems to be just a matter of a few days, they flower, set seed and begin to disperse their numerous offspring throughout the landscape. This year's crop of crab grass is especially prolific, having attained prize winning stature. Quick action is critical, especially for any plants bearing seed heads, to avoid a major weed infestation in the years to come.

As I ventured forth this week to inspect the consequences of several weeks of neglect, it became apparent that weeds were not the only intruders during my time away. Voracious, leaf-eating varmints had selectively pruned a variety of plants. Moments later, a rustling in the meadow revealed the probable source, as Bambi and a very large doe emerged to continue their midday snack. In several beds, annuals were uprooted and the soil was riddled with holes, most likely the work of foraging skunks. Caterpillars had decimated the petunias and a few of may choice perennials. Many trees, roses and their relatives displayed lacy foliage, the result of beetle attacks. Slug and snail damage was evident in the shady borders but thankfully, not nearly as widespread as it has been in other years, most likely due to the dry period we experienced in May. A few hours of weeding, pruning and deadheading produced a remarkably quick recovery of a few of the perennial borders and despite the relatively sparse bloom, the gardens looked quite respectable in short order. As I paused to admire their tidy appearance, my eye was drawn to the beautiful bark of a nearby Stewartia. This handsome tree should be more widely grown as it has so many positive attributes and few, if any, problems. The Korean stewartia (S. koreana) produces lovely, plump buds in late spring which open to three-inch wide, waxy white blossoms with a prominent cluster of yellow stamens in the center, around the 4th of July. Each elegant bloom resembles a camellia, or single white rose and seems to last only a day, but there is a succession of flowers at a time when few other trees are in bloom. In autumn, the attractive foliage turns shades of yellow, red and orange as the smooth, pewter gray bark exfoliates to reveal creamy white patches. Tolerant of partial shade, the stewartia performs best in moisture-retentive, well-drained soils. Its relatively upright, pyramidal growth habit makes it ideal for smaller properties or for use as a specimen plant. The Japanese stewartia (S. pseudocamellia) tends to grow somewhat larger with reddish-brown, peeling bark, bronze-tinted fall foliage and slightly smaller, cup-shaped white flowers.

The sourwood or sorrel tree (Oxydendrum arboreum) is an elegant specimen tree which is native to the eastern United States. Occasionally referred to as the lily-of-the-valley tree because it bears clusters of fragrant, creamy white flowers which resemble spring-blooming Japanese andromedas, its showy blooms are produced during the months of August and September. Lustrous green leaves, reminiscent of laurel, turn a vibrant scarlet red in autumn. The sourwood thrives in moist, humus enriched soils which are well-drained. Although it is shade tolerant, its spectacular fall color is best in full sun.

Several years ago, at the New England Spring Flower Show, I fell in love with a weeping Katsura tree (Cercidiphyllum japonicum) and proudly display a graceful specimen at one corner of a new addition to my home. It is always the source of comments and inquiries from visitors. Although it does not produce noticeable blooms, its attractive form and foliage more than make up for the absence of flowers. Quantities of small, heart-shaped leaves, on cascading branches, create a lovely effect, and its colorful, yellow fall foliage, set against shaggy brown bark, is an added bonus. The katsura is not susceptible to pests or diseases and adapts to nearly any soil, although it should be watered during periods of drought. Upright specimens, with single or multi-stemmed trunks, are equally attractive and tend to be more somewhat more available in the trade, but it is definitely worth the search for the pendulous form.

My most recent addition to the garden is a small ginkgo tree (Ginkgo biloba). Also known as the maidenhair tree, this prehistoric plant has remained relatively unchanged for 150 million years. Its fan-shaped leaves are distinctive and exquisite and are produced on many short twigs. I purchased a very slow-growing, dwarf cultivar named "Gay Butterflies" last season and have discovered several other new selections at a variety of local nurseries in recent years. Although the ginkgo prefers moist, well-drained soils in full sun, it will adapt to nearly any soil type. A popular street tree in urban environments, it is tolerant of pollution and immune to diseases or insects. The sexes are separate in these ancient trees, but in general, only the males are available in the trade as the fruit produced by the females is quite messy and foul-smelling.

There are many handsome, hardy, uncommon trees which are well worth searching for although it may be necessary to make a number of inquiries. Visit your local nurseries and if they do not currently stock these low-maintenance trees which offer multiple seasons of interest, request that they order them in the future. You will be rewarded with unique, year-round beauty for many seasons to come.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

THURSDAY, AUGUST 30

The Capricorn moon aligns with Mercury at 2:28 a.m. and becomes inactive. At 7:48 a.m. an Aquarius moon takes over, generating an upbeat mood. Lunar alignments to Venus and Neptune make this a great day to network, brainstorm and dream, but get a reality check before making a major commitment. Gather with friends and enjoy life to its fullest this evening.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 31

The morning holds high potential for productivity. Plan to get an early start. Launch new activities before 12:49 p.m., when the Aquarius moon forms a harmonious contact to Saturn. Mercury moves into Libra at 8:37 p.m., remaining there until November 7. Mercury will begin retrograde travel, when it reaches the last degree of Libra, October 1. Don't be a hermit tonight. This evening tops the charts for partying.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1,

September's planetary action may point you in new directions. Plan to get major ventures off the ground during the first three weeks, because a Mercury retrograde period affects the last few days. A full moon culminates in the middle of this holiday weekend, generating high energy, excitement. Today the Aquarius moon continues active travel until 1:36 p.m., when it aligns with Mars. An opposition of Venus/Neptune warns against taking anything or anyone too seriously. Keep it light; go for the good times. The final windup to the full moon begins at 8:32 p.m., when the moon enters Pisces. The stage is set for partying into the wee hours of the morning.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2

A harmonious alignment of the sun and jovial Jupiter saves the day. The full moon culminates at 5:43 p.m., 10 1/2-degrees of Pisces. However, astrological storm clouds move in this evening, when the moon forms challenging 90-degree alignments to Pluto and Saturn. People may be hypersensitive, emotional, moody. Don't rock the boat. Pursue activities that help you to mellow out.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 3

The moon continues active travel in Pisces. This is not a favorable time for making important decisions or launching large-scale enterprises. Take a vacation from routine and responsibility; get extra rest, relax, unwind.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 4

Gear up for a hectic day. There may be unexpected setbacks, breakdowns, obstacles. Instead of initiating new projects, this is a time to research, study, prepare. The Pisces moon aligns with Mars at 4:37 a.m. and becomes inactive. At 8:58 a.m. the moon enters fiery Aries. A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Pluto takes center stage, however, prompting you to clean house on all levels. Let go of old behaviors, habits, resentments; get your life in order.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5

A harmonious alignment of Mercury and Neptune this morning advises you to remember your dreams, follow your intuition. Tackle jobs that need your imagination and creativity. The Aries moon continues to set a fast pace. However, the moon forms easy contacts to planets. You can be most productive, if you carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan. The green light is on for new starts across the board.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 6

Planetary action continues to rate high this morning. The Aries moon is active until 6:31 p.m., when it aligns with the planet Mars. It is best to launch major ventures, sign contracts, make big purchases before 1:05 p.m., when Venus forms a harmonious contact to Pluto. All creative endeavors also get the green light. Go for the gold. Influences turn around completely this evening. The moon enters Taurus at 8:18 p.m. A 90-degree alignment of the sun to Saturn urges you to drop worries and self-doubts. Stay upbeat and go with the flow.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 7

A lunar alignment to Neptune can make for a slow start to the morning. Allow extra time to get where you are going. People may be feeling sleepy and can be careless, late for appointments. This influence eases off by 10:00 a.m., however, and the remainder of the day holds high potential for productivity. Start new activities before 5:42 p.m., when the moon forms a harmonious contact to expansive Jupiter. An applying alignment of Venus/Saturn makes this a wonderful evening to spend quality time with close friends and family.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8

This is a great day for socializing, vacationing. If you are working, it may be difficult to focus on one job. The Taurus moon becomes inactive at 2:30 p.m., when it aligns with changeable Uranus. The planet Mars enters Capricorn at 1:51 p.m., traveling there until October 27. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Jupiter generates an upbeat mood. People will be friendly, agreeable, talkative. On the other hand, don't get carried away and go to extremes. Maintain a balance.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 9

This day rates high across the board. The moon enters Gemini at 5:41 a.m. Mercury, planetary ruler of Gemini, prepares to form harmonious contacts to Pluto and Saturn. That means that influences are prime for decision-making, contract-signing, launching new enterprises. Pull out all the stops. All communications are highlighted; send e-mails, faxes, write letters. Zero in on work projects that require mental precision, focus. You can cut through obstacles, see the reality of a situation and find solutions. On the other hand, if you prefer to play and party, this is a wonderful day for fun and games.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10

Above-average planetary activity continues. Read yesterday's advice. Mercury aligns with Pluto at 12:40 a.m. A lunar opposition to Pluto may generate emotional thunderstorms until 6:00 a.m. Take on a busy work schedule. You can be most productive. Handle a variety of jobs, errands. The green light for new starts remains on until 9:42 p.m., when the Gemini moon becomes inactive.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11

Carefully organize your time this morning; tackle a variety of jobs, errands. Finish old business rather than starting new projects. The Gemini moon continues inactive travel until 12:09 p.m., when a Cancer moon takes over. Keep a cool head and sidestep irritability between 12:56-3:56 p.m., when the moon opposes Mars. Influences turn around completely thereafter. Plan to sign contracts, initiate major projects between 4:00-6:06 p.m., when Mercury aligns with Saturn. Enjoy a special dinner with close friends and family this evening.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12

Start new activities before 8:32 a.m., when the Cancer moon aligns with expansive Jupiter. The moon continues active travel in the sign Cancer until 11:16 p.m. Focus on family and domestic responsibilities; give extra time and attention to loved ones. Go on a cooking or baking spree.

Town wins uncommon $16K grant

Will help preserve Cohasset Common

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

As one of town's crown jewels, Cohasset Common is in need of a long-term planning and preservation effort as much as any area in town.

The common, part of the Cohasset Common Historic District, a nationally recognized landmark, has been around longer than the town of Cohasset itself. It was part of the original 1769 land subdivision, made when Cohasset was still a hayfield for Hingham residents.

In order to help ensure the 232-year old common's longevity, the Department of Environmental Management announced late last month that the town has been awarded a $16,200 Historic Landscape Preservation Grant for Cohasset Common

"We're very excited," said Jacqueline Clark, head of the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission, which will oversee the grant and the planning effort.

"This planning grant will help us maintain one of the town's most vital assets," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "With it, we can put together a plan to make sure it looks the way it always has looked."

The grant was filed by the town, in conjunction with the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, and is a matching grant. The $16,200 represents a 55 percent commitment from the state; the remaining 45

Leaf it to them

New group wants to help choose trees

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Norway and red maples may look like great trees to plant. Their branches are ideal for climbing and their wide green or maroon leaves provide ample shade. However, to some, the trees are invasive grass killers, not worthy to hold a place on prestigious Cohasset Common.

Five of maple trees were planted on the common recently and a newly formed group hopes to ensure it never happens again.

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset has put together a tree advisory committee that the club hopes will be recognized by the town as a resource before selecting trees to be planted on public property. The group is scheduled to appear before selectmen on Tuesday.

"We hope they recommend this tree committee be contacted before any plantings are done on public property," said committee chairman Phyllis Peck. "We want to introduce more variety and more beautiful species to the town."

The problem the group has with the maples, is not aesthetic, but biological.

"The tree is so prolific with its seed-bearing capacity, birds and the wind help to spread the seeds to the ground and into the woods and eventually they crowd out other native trees and plants," she said. "The town is full of them."

Flush with 'free cash'

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Unlike most people, who suddenly find themselves with more than $1 million in cash and might be tempted go on a spending spree — the town of Cohasset is putting its money in the bank.

Haddad hopes to hold at least $400,000 to offset the next year's fiscal year 2003 operating budget to avoid the need for a Prop. 2-1/2 override.

A recent report by finance director Michael Buckley said the town's free cash reserve for the 2001 fiscal year "by far surpasses any previous balance" at $1,643,639, however much less is expected to be available for the fall Special Town Meeting.

Free cash is money available for the town to spend, but has not been allocated to a specific line item in the budget.

Extra revenues from sewer betterments and the Osgood School construction project have flooded the free cash reserves, with more than $700,000. But Buckley and Town Manager Mark Haddad said the money should be set aside and used to pay off the projects' debt

SUMMER'S END

Cailee Hart takes advantage of the last few days of summer vacation by riding rings around the duck pond at Cohasset Common.

Like it or not: Winter's coming

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

School's in and the leaves at the top of some trees are already starting to change color – two happenings that spell the end of summer and impending fall to most of us.

But to DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield, summer is as good as over on the Fourth of July. That's when he starts to think about Old Man Winter's return to the region.

And it's not a thought he relishes.

"I hate it with a passion," says Litchfield, who retires in April. "The one thing that is driving me away is those phone calls at 2-3 a.m."

It's usually the wee hours of the morning when the police call Litchfield to tell him the roads need sanding.

Litchfield was elected as highway surveyor back in 1978 and served six, three-year terms before Cohasset created a Department of Public Works and the position of DPW superintendent became appointed. So he's seen his share of walloping winter storms including cleaning up from the infamous Blizzard of '78 that shut down the state for a week.

So he doesn't pay much heed to predictions including the latest from the Farmers Almanac, which says the Northeast can expect an early winter this year.

"People ask me how much snow we're going to get," Litchfield says. "I tell them, 'I'll let you know on April 15.'"

The Farmers Almanac is now on sale at area stores. Its chief weather prognosticator Caleb Weatherbee writes, "according to our time-tested formula, winter will begin early.

"People ask me how much snow we're going to get. I tell them, 'I'll let you know on April 15.'"
— DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield

"We expect another very active winter weather pattern, especially in the Northeast."

Litchfield says the DPW is ready for winter, no matter when it arrives. The Mass. Highway Department, which is constructing a new storage shed, gave the town 100 tons of salt, he said.

The Cohasset DPW, with its three big and five small sanders and four plows, is responsible for the 37 miles of accepted roads in Cohasset and 11 miles of private ways. MassHighway takes care of Route 3A, a state highway.

Litchfield also calls in seven private contractors to help with plow-

MBTA to meet with ConCom tonight

By Rick Collins
RCOLLINS@CNC.COM

With the state permitting process under way, the MBTA will begin the local permitting process tonight when it presents its Greenbush commuter rail plans before the Cohasset Conservation Commission.

The meeting, which starts at 7:30 p.m. at town hall, is the only scheduled agenda item for the two hour-plus meeting.

The MBTA filed its Notice of Intent forms with the commission last month. The two-inch thick document outlines the impact the rail bed, station, track drainage systems, bridge over Rocky Lane and fencing will have on the town's wetlands and watershed areas.

According to the document, 700,000 square feet of work will be done within a wetlands buffer zone, and "unavoidable impacts to wetlands and floodplain resources will occur."

The meeting, which starts at 7:30 p.m. at town hall, is the only scheduled agenda item for the two hour-plus meeting.

Despite the magnitude of the project, co-chairman Deborah Cook said the commission plans on conducting the hearing as if it were a town resident looking to build within a wetlands buffer zone.

"We're going to treat it like any other NOI, although there will probably be a lot more people there," said Cook, who served on the Greenbush Citizens Advisory Committee for 14 years before resigning this year.

Cook was unclear exactly how much weight the conservation commission has in deciding conditions for the project.

"There are so many things they [the state] can override," she said. "I don't think we can stop it for wetlands…But we definitely want to have some input; we're one of towns most heavily impacted."

The several hundred page filing goes into detail about how the MBTA will clear brush from the long-dormant rail bed; how high overhanging tree branches must be to avoid the axe; and engineering data for storm water management systems.

Cook said the MBTA has presented the information in the past in a "generalized" manner and wasn't sure into how much detail the NOI hearing would go.

Cook did say residents will have an opportunity to comment as part of the public hearing, which she thought would probably continue into an another night.

The project, which is the third branch of the Old Colony Line, recently received an environmental green-light from Environmental Affairs Secretary Robert Durand.

British conglomerate buys out Mass-American Water Company

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Five months after receiving a 10-1/2 percent rate hike — Mass-American Water Company that serves Hingham, North Cohasset and Hull was bought by one of the largest water companies in the world.

Aquarion Company, a Connecticut based water provider, and its British parent company Kelda Group, agreed to buy Mass-American, along with subsidiaries in Connecticut, New York and New Hampshire, from American Water Works Company for $233 million.

Mass-American serves 26,000 people in Hingham, North Cohasset, Hull, Oxford and Millbury.

With the acquisition, Aquarion will now serve more than 650,000 people across New England and Long Island, N.Y., making it one of the largest privately-owned water providers in the country. Kelda Group provides water for 4-1/2 million residents in Yorkshire County, England.

"The basic major benefit is we're combining the skills and expertise and talents of American Water Works and Aquarion, in order to bring efficiencies toward being the best water utility," said Adrienne Vaughan, a spokeswoman for Aquarion.

She said the company doesn't plan on changing anything immediately, except that the customer call centers will be consolidated into Aquarion's existing center in Greenwich, Conn.

"Everything else will stay the same for the meantime," she said.

Keith Bossung, vice-president of Mass-American, said the company had not been up for sale, and Aquarion initiated the deal.

"It was a matter of Aquarion approaching the company with interest in acquiring New England-based companies," he said.

Bossung said the buyout must now receive regulatory approval on the state and federal levels, and estimated that process could take up to a year to complete.

Bossung will remain in his position as the liaison between the company and the towns for at least a year after the purchase is complete.

As for now, it's the status quo in terms of rates and service.

"If anything it will get better," he said.

Local officials were cautiously optimistic at the news of the purchase.

"I would hope the new company would come in and do things more efficiently, versus putting their efforts into seeking rate increases," said state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth.

This past spring's rate hike was a 10-1/2 percent increase over what were already some of the highest water rates in the country. The average family's annual water bill in the Mass-American service area is about $700 a year.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, and a Mass-American rate-payer, echoed Hedlund's thoughts.

"My hope is that this company will be more concerned with its customers than its stockholders," he said.

Mass-American's parent company, American Water Works, is the largest publicly traded water company in the country. During last January's public hearing on the proposed rate hike, a Hull resident said the company had paid stockholders $83 million in 1999.

Bradley was also concerned about a foreign corporation coming in to take over a local utility.

"When we're dealing with utilities, I think it's better to have a local company with local roots controlling the local utilities," he said.

Cohasset Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed, a former chairman of the Cohasset Water Commission that governs the town's municipal water supply, said he wasn't familiar with Aquarion or the Kelda Group.

"When there's a consolidation like this, it's very important who the buyer is and what type of service they'll provide," he said.

Approximately 700 North Cohasset residents use Mass-American water, rather then the municipal water supply.

According to a press release, the newly-acquired Connecticut company will become consolidated with Aquarion's existing Connecticut company. The rest will remain separate divisions with a new company name.

Legislature OKs cemetery bill

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A bill allowing Cohasset to repay the loan for the long-awaited expansion of the Woodside Cemetery over a period of 10 years, rather than five, was passed into law last week.

"It's been a long time coming and we're happy," said Woodside Cemetery Expansion Committee member Glenn Pratt.

The $700,000 expansion project, which is underway, will create 1,800 burial spaces for town residents when completed. It will also create a memorial to the town's Gold Star Mothers, who lost sons in war.

There are currently no spaces left in the existing cemetery.

Town Meeting approved the expansion project in April, ending a 24-year battle over where to build more cemetery space in town. The town plans to repay the loan over a period of 10 years through the sale of plots. If the bill had not passed, the town would have had to come up with the money sooner.

"We needed that change in the repayment terms, because we needed to know our plot sales would generate enough income to pay off the loan," said Pratt. "If we had to do it within five years, we wouldn't have been able to sell enough."

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, helped shepherd the bill through the state legislature.

"The ability to complete these improvements while spacing the repayment out over a 10-year period is very important to the town. I'm very glad that I was able to take part in this worthy cause," said Hedlund.

Rep. Bradley added, "I'm glad that the Legislature saw the merit of this bill and realized the need for this project."

Pratt said he expects most of the work to be completed by the beginning of October. He hopes to dedicate the new cemetery and Gold Star Mothers Memorial on Veterans Day.

Like it or not: Winter's coming

ing if necessary. He explained the sand goes into the bodies of the sanders and the chains on the wheels of the truck the week before Thanksgiving.

"We have good kit here and good men," Litchfield says. "When I started years ago, we had punk trucks."

Litchfield came to work for the highway department as a laborer back on Nov. 10, 1960. He worked his way up the ladder to truck driver and heavy equipment operator before being elected to head the department.

The worst winter in recent memory was 1995, he recalls. And Litchfield won't soon forget the April Fools Day blizzard in 1997, when the day before the DPW crew got distracted by another job and didn't take the plows off the trucks.

"That was the only thing that saved me," he recalls.

When winter comes, the superintendent of schools checks in with Litchfield about 5 a.m. if it's been a snowy night.

"He asks, 'What do you think?'," Litchfield says. "I say, 'I won't tell you what I think, but I'll tell you what the conditions are.'"

Litchfield says the snowiest part of town is the Beechwood area from Mealy's Pond to the Scituate Town Line.

So even though fall has yet to arrive – Litchfield is thinking ahead.

"I was just telling one of my men it won't be long before I'm hollering it's time to put the sanders on," he says. "But I hope winter's not early. I hope we still get a little bit of good weather between now and then."

Three beautiful baby girls bounce into town

AROUND TOWN

Jessica Processing

FIRST GRADER

Hello Cohasset. I hope that all students young and old had a wonderful start to this new school year. For me, it has been a little sad as my youngest is now in first grade. I cannot imagine what it will be like when they head off to college, yikes!

SESTITOS DELIVER!

As the saying goes, "Thank Heavens for Little Girls" and that certainly holds true this month. I have three little ladies to announce to everyone and they are all special, little princesses. Joey, 5, and Domenic, 3, along with Mom and Dad, Joe and Lily Sestito welcomed Gabriella Mia on July 12, 2001 into their home. This little girl is surrounded by family all over the place and will never want for a hug, kiss or cuddle. Congratulations to the whole Sestito family.

BABY BRIDGET

Kyle, 3, and David, 1, along with their mom and dad, David and Ann Burke, welcomed a beautiful new sister and daughter into their home on Aug. 28 at 6:03 am. Bridget Ann Burke weighed in at 7 lbs. 8 oz. and has a head full of black hair. I know that we will see this little one walking around town with her brother and sister, make sure to take a peek and pass on the congratulations.

LOVELY LAUREN

Last, but certainly not least is the announcement of baby number vie from big sisters Amanda (8), Nicole (6), Valerie (5) and big brother Jimmy, (2) and their parents, Jim and Nancy Farren. Lauren Maria Farren was born on Aug. 21, 2001, weighing 7 lbs. and was 20-1/2 ins. long. This family is so strong and filled with love that little Lauren is truly a lucky little girl. We know how happy everyone is with this little girl. Congratulations to the whole family! This is one of the best parts of this job, announcing the births of new additions. Congratulations to each family and I cannot wait to meet all these sweet baby girls.

PANCAKE BREAKFAST

Mmm,Mmm, Mmm! The smell of pancakes will soon be in the air and everyone reading this should try to get a taste. The Cohasset Soccer Boosters annual breakfast will be held this year on Sunday, Sept. 30 at the Deer Hill School cafeteria from 8 a.m.-12 p.m. Tickets are $5 a piece or a $20 maximum family donation and can be purchased from a varsity or junior varsity soccer player or call Kathie at 781-383-1237 for more info! Your support is much needed and the reward for support to this breakfast is delicious.

WALK FOR THE JIMMY FUND

Also happening on Sunday, Sept 30, is the Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk and two Cohasset residents will be walking in it. Dan and Judy Cellucci will be walking to help raise money in this 26.2 mile walk. Participants can register as a team or as an individual and each person or team needs to raise a minimum of $100 in pledges. This would be a great way to enjoy Boston's "hometown walk", raise money for a wonderful cause and enjoy being part of a wonderful and beneficial day. Walkers can choose the 26.2 mile course from Hopkington, 13.1 mile walk from Wellesley or, they can join parents and families on a three-mile route that begins at Harvard Medical School Quad. All walkers will finish at the Copley Square finish line. To register, or make financial contributions, visit www.jimmyfund.org or mail them to Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk, 375 Longwood Ave, 7th Floor, Boston, MA 02215. For more information call 617-632-3562.

MIT GRAD

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) held its commencement exercise on June 8, 2001 and Cohasset's own Christopher T. Lesniewski-Laas graduated with a bachelor's in mathematics. Christopher is the son of Marek and Elizabeth Lesniewski-Laas of Pratt Court. Great job, Christopher.

MIXING ART WITH WINE

Many people in town will remember this next woman, Ms. Shirley Neer. Shirley lived in Cohasset most of her life...she taught nursery school in the Cohasset schools and was an exceptional community leader serving on many local boards. The South Shore Art Center will hold a Wine Tasting and Art Exhibition to benefit the Shirley Neer Fund. Artist Kerry Hallum of Nantucket will have his work on exhibition at the South Shore Art Center, Cohasset from Sept. 13-16. This exhibition of paintings of internationally acclaimed Hallam will be held in conjunction with a benefit to augment the Art Center's Shirley F. Neer Teaching Chair in Children's Art. This event, a wine tasting, promises to be a unique opportunity to explore the fine wines of the Rhone Valley and view captivating artwork while helping to support art education on the South Shore. The wine tasting will take place on Friday, Sept. 14 from 6:30-9:30 p.m. and the cost for this is $60. To make reservations for this wonderful event, call 781-383-2787 no later than Sept. 10.

SEND-OFF PARTY

Ian and Debbie Johnston hosted a "Where is Dianne Going?" barbecue at their home at Caravel By The Sea on Labor Day Weekend. Dianne Hand, Debbie's sister, left her position as controller for Turner Entertainment Network (TEN) in Atlanta and joined the U.S. State Department. She is assigned to Rangoon, Burma as the financial officer for the U.S. Embassy. Everyone wished her well as the Caravel Croquet Court was in full swing (literally) and Bob Harden proved to be the golf putting champion!

Make sure to notice it at the end of this column as well as the address for the school page and column. The quote for this week is a really cool one that has given me a lot to think about.

Scituate Animal Shelter hosts benefit at Siro's in Hingham

By Michael Marotta
MMAROTTA@CNC.COM

There will be television personalities and politicians in attendance, but the stars of this show will be walking on all fours.

Kyle and Nikki, two, 10-year-old Huskies, recently adopted from the Scituate Animal Shelter will make a guest appearance at the third annual shelter benefit, Sunday at Siro's Restaurant in Hingham. The afternoon fundraising event featuring appetizers, cocktails, a buffet and a silent auction will run from 2-5 p.m.

Kyle and Nikki, who were residents at the shelter from January until last week, will be walking, howling proof of the facility's good work at placing unwanted or abandoned cats and dogs in new, loving homes.

The cost of caring for these animals until they are adopted can be high which is why the mostly volunteer staffed shelter hosts fundraisers like the Siro's event annually. The March yard sale and successful house tour held in June also benefits the shelter, but Sunday's soiree is the biggest annual money maker for the shelter. Last year the $50 ticket event raised $18,000 and Director Joan McCafferty and the friends of the shelter are hoping to at least match that amount this year.

"This is our biggest benefit," McCafferty said. "If we could match (last year's figure) that would be great."

The money is desperately needed for food, supplies and costly veterinary care. McCafferty estimates the vet bills for the shelter alone top $25,000 annually.

Fortunately, the shelter can depend on volunteers from throughout the shelter's service area of Cohasset, Hull, Norwell and Scituate to lend a hand. Volunteers give their time to walk dogs, feed cats, and clean cages and more help is always welcome, McCafferty said.

The theme of volunteering has extended outside of the shelter's domain and into Siro's, where just about everything offered at the benefit has been donated. That way, all proceeds, go directly back to cover the shelter's operating costs.

"We've been very fortunate," said Diane St. Ours, a volunteer at the shelter and organizer of the event. "A lot of people have been really generous to us and every single penny that we make goes back to the shelter."

Siro's, who is hosting the event for the third year, was offered up by owner Chris Hendrickson free of cost. The invitations used were provided by John Bond of Bond Printing in Hanover, and all decorations have come from local business people with big hearts and a love of animals.

Some of the most prized donations for the event will be those up for grabs during the afternoon silent auction.

Four artists renderings, two of which are of lighthouses, will be available to the highest bidder. Last year, paintings auctioned off brought in a tidy sum.

Two miniature Teddy Bears will be auctioned off in memory of St. Ours' sister, Victoria Duffy, an avid bear collector and shelter benefit volunteer who passed away recently. Other items include gift certificates to restaurants, therapeutic massages and hand-painted furniture from Scituate resident Cheryl Coats.

What might be more appealing than actually winning an auction item might be the bragging rights that could possibly come with outbidding local politicians. State Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, will be in attendance, as well as Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth. Other well-known local celebrities include Channel 56's Mike Wankum, who has adopted a dog from the shelter and Christine James from WATD in Marshfield.

Pet pharmacy makes pills easier to swallow

By Michael Marotta
MMAROTTA@CNC.COM

Kathleen Taylor isn't too worried about dogs taking their medicine.

Cats, ferrets, gerbils and other pets are another story entirely.

"Dogs eat just about anything," Taylor said.

While anything somewhat edible will find it's way through a dog's digestive track, other animals are very picky about what goes into their mouths. So when it's time to give them medicine, most animals reject it, unless it's compounded with another flavor or reduced in dosage.

"I can make chew treats, so a cat or dog or ferret can eat them. It makes it a lot easier for the vet to prescribe something."

— Pet pharmacist Kathleen Taylor

When one of Taylor's cats, Fraiser, became sick and needed emergency treatment three years ago, the only medication the cats would take had to be overnighted from Wisconsin. If the treatment didn't make it to Robert's Animal Hospital in Hanover the next day, Frasier would have had to be put down.

That got Taylor thinking. She wanted to find a way to combine her love of animals with her career, which was specializing in nuclear pharmacy at Harvard Medical School's Joint Program in Nuclear Medicine as well as working compounding radioactive prescriptions for hospitals in the Longwood medical area.

Now, 13 years after she first began compounding nuclear prescriptions, Taylor has shifted her pharmaceutical focus to animals. On Tuesday, she opened up Animal Pharm on Front Street, which specializes in compounding veterinary prescriptions so they're easier to swallow, literally. By compounding the medication, she is able to alter the flavor to an animal's liking, making an easier experience for the pet as well as the pet owner who knows just how selective his or her pet is.

"About one in every for or five prescriptions that a vet writes needs to be compounded into either different dosage form or flavored suspension," Taylor said. "I can make chew treats, so a cat or dog or ferret can eat them. It makes it a lot easier for the vet to prescribe something. That way the pet owner is a lot more at ease and ultimately the animal gets the medication it needs."

Animal Pharm is the first veterinary compounding pharmacy in Massachusetts. After putting in a year of study with the American College of Veterinary Pharmacists, she polled local animal hospitals to see if such a service would be needed. The response was so positive it gave her the confidence to open up Animal Pharm.

But she stressed that Animal Pharm, which is designed at a retail establishment in that compounded medication can be picked up, dropped off or sent out by mail, is not intended to compete with local shelters and hospitals.

"The last thing I want to do is compete with them," she said. "They dispense most of their own prescriptions, I just want to help them out and compliment their practice."

As well as adding flavor to medication, Taylor also specializes in pluronic gels, which takes an oral prescription and compounds it into a substance that is then applied to an animals ear and absorbs through the skin. Taylor said the practice is uncommon among vets because of time constraints.

But the time factor isn't an issue for Taylor, who believes she can make a painful experience for a pet owner, not to mention the pet receiving treatment, a lot more bearable.

"If a vet tells a client to take a prescription to a pharmacy and have them flavor it, most of the time they will throw in a sardine or tuna based suspension," she said.

That might work for some dogs, she said, but not for cats raised on Fancy Feast.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Saving all creatures great and small

On any given week, they may be low on canned cat food. Sometimes it's kitty litter or even dog food they're running out of.

With the many canine and feline residents they house, feed and care for, staff members at the Scituate Animal Shelter often need a helping hand. And day after day, year after year, people from all over the shelter's service area of Scituate, Cohasset, Hull and Norwell, come through.

Throughout the year, dozens of volunteers give of their time to walk dogs, feed cats, and clean cages at the Driftway facility. Other friends of the shelter like Cheryl Coates have found additional ways to help. Coates hand painted furniture to raffle off at local gift shops to support the shelter. She also designed decorative wooden collection bins and placed them at area grocery stores so that shoppers can drop a can or two of dog food or a bag of kitty litter or a pet toy in the box on their way out of the store.

But food and pet supplies aren't the only thing the busy no-kill shelter needs to keep its residents wagging their tails. Veterinary care for the animals, many of them unwanted or abandoned, is by far the shelter's largest expense. Director Joan McCafferty estimates vet bills add up to more than $25,000 per year. Whether it's treatment for heart worm, spaying, neutering, vaccinations, or more serious procedures for injured and sick animals, McCafferty and her staff make sure the animals are in good health and good spirits before being adopted.

And the shelter's success rate is impressive. At last count the shelter had found homes for 1,671 cats, dogs and a few ferrets in between.

"Husband and wife" huskies Kyle and Nikki, both 10-1/2 are the most recent success story. The pair who arrived at the shelter in January, had to be adopted together. Kyle would cry in his cage if Nikki was taken out of her pen for even a short walk without him. It was a package deal. But the question was who would take two, larger, older dogs. Add to that tall order, Nikki's kidney troubles that require her to be on a special diet for the rest of her life and it seemed like the duo were going to call the shelter home for the rest of their lives. Last weekend two Rockland men adopted the husky pair after seeing them first on Petfinder.com and then in person at the shelter. Kyle and Nikki were able to trade in their cement pens for a sprawling 10 room Victorian home where we're told classical music plays all day long for the pampered pooches.

Happy endings like that make the work all worthwhile, said McCafferty.

But there are sad stories to tell, too. There was the litter of golden retriever/collie mix pups recently dumped at Hingham's Wompatuck State Park and left to fend for themselves. The shelter saved two of the skinny, flea-infested puppies and after a couple weeks of care placed both in good homes. Then there's Misty a sweet black lab mix badly abused by her last owners, who, when she first came to the shelter would cower in the corner at the sight of a leash in someone's hand. Two months later Misty is on the mend and doing a lot better, but still not quite ready for adoption. She lives with two other canine residents and about 60 cats now at the shelter waiting for homes.

On Sunday, the Scituate Animal Shelter will host its third annual benefit at Siro's in Hingham. It is the shelter's largest fundraiser of the year. Last year's benefit brought in $18,000 — a large chunk of the facility's annual veterinary costs — and McCafferty and the friends of the shelter hope to at least match that amount this year. Tickets for the afternoon of great food, wine and music are $50.

But if you can't make the event, there are still ways to help out our four-legged friends and those that care for them.

The shelter welcomes donations and is always looking for volunteers especially during morning hours.

For more information on Sunday's benefit or on volunteering at the shelter call (781) 545-8703.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Pedestrian safety

TO THE EDITOR:

Murray Campbell is a reliable source of common sense and useful insights. His letter last week, cautioning pedestrians to act more safely while on potentially dangerous roads, of course was on target. However, a reader might infer from his focus on the pedestrian side of the equation that drivers do not carry a far greater burden.

Most of our streets have no sidewalks, so pedestrians appropriately use the roads. Even with sidewalks, bicyclists, typically slower than cars, belong on the road. It is perfectly obvious that the size, weight and speed of cars sharing the road are inherently very dangerous to pedestrians and bicyclists. Because cars are such an ordinary part of our lives, it is easy to forget that pedestrians and bicyclists are within inches of serious injury or death every time a car passes.

Part of the charm and history of Cohasset are the winding roads. But that makes for a lot of blind spots. I would caution drivers to always be prepared for a pedestrian or bicyclist just around the next bend. When necessary, drive at a crawl behind a pedestrian or bicyclist until it is safe to pass. It won't kill you to arrive 20 seconds later. And it won't kill a pedestrian or bicyclist.

Thanks for support

I would like to thank everyone who either attended the dance in memory of "DIGA" or who donated to its worthy causes, the American Diabetes Association and the Brian Marshall Scholarship for the Arts.

To all the musicians, Jimo, Wilson, Sonny, Ed, PJ, Kevin, Kenny, Ellie, Joe and Jim for playing Brian's (and our) favorite songs in such top form. To Sue for the beautiful flowers, Sharpless for the slide show equipment and to the Red Lion Inn for the barn, thank you.

Brian is very much missed, but his spirit was certainly alive and in attendance last Thursday night.

You could feel it in the room what with so many people whom he loved, enjoying the company of one another, and having a ball! Thank you all so much.

HEALTH NOTES

Health issues in school

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

With the opening of School amid construction and other distractions, it promises to be a hectic year. This fall, as in every fall, Joe Godzik, the town's health officer makes an inspection of the schools in the Cohasset system.

Findings from these inspections are reported to the health nurse, and the respective school principals. If a health threat is found, an order is sent to the respective principal to rectify the situation.

In very few cases do conditions actually represent a health threat. One example is asbestos. In the Deer Hill and middle high school, large amounts of asbestos floor tile were removed. This material, although containing asbestos, represents an absolutely minimal threat, since the asbestos is bound up by a dense resin, and dust from the tiles contains very small and dense fragments of the asbestos/resin material. Asbestos pipe lagging, on the other hand, sometimes found in furnace installations, requires care in removal because of the light, volatile nature of the asbestos fibers. These fibers may be inhaled and are a definite carcinogen. The town takes very stringent precautions in removal of asbestos of the latter type.

Another problem is odors. Many children are susceptible to asthma and attacks may be triggered by strong odors and other allergens. For this reason it is appropriate for students to report unusual odors and possible allergens such as excessive dust to the school staff so that they may be evaluated and the Board of Health called if necessary. Most volatile organic compounds (VOC's) have strong odors. Inhaling such odors puts them rapidly into the blood stream, a practice that should generally be avoided.

Many children are susceptible to asthma and attacks may be triggered by strong odors and other allergens.

The Cohasset School System has had a very good record of responding to health threats in our schools, nevertheless, it's important for parents to be vigilant, since, according to the EPA, "Failure to respond promptly and effectively to poor indoor air quality(IAQ) in schools can cause severe consequences. These include an increase in short- and long-term health problems (leading to more absenteeism), a greater risk that school rooms or buildings will have to be closed and students and staff temporarily relocated, and potential liability problems." The EPA has prepared a kit for school officials to use in managing the indoor air quality of our schools. This kit, approved by the National PTA Association contains much information about managing IAQ in our schools.

The IAQ Tools for Schools Kit is a one-stop resource for a school building's health. It can be obtained at the IAQ web site: http://www.epa.gov/iaq/schools/index.html You may wish to recommend that our school system use these materials.

Student volunteer monitoring

This summer, the high school students again carried out water quality monitoring in Little Harbor and Cohasset Cove. The results are just now beginning to be received by the Board of Health, but the results appear to be sufficiently useful to be used in estimating the level of bacterial activity in our water bodies. As the results are analyzed and the results become more organized, the data will be reported in future health notes.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

NRSWA director Bill Stanton (at the left of the car), addresses a group of interested citizens before touring the marsh area at the Driftway, where the MBTA is proposing a layover station for the Greenbush Line.

Greenbush layover site a victory for NSRWA

By Bill Stanton
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

— COMMENTARY —

On Aug. 20, 2001 Executive Office of Environmental Affairs Secretary Robert Durand issued his certificate relating to the MBTA's Final Environmental Impact Report relating to the Greenbush commuter rail line. The certificate allows the project to go forward with the following caveats: (1) the Weymouth Landing crossing must be given greater study; (2) the MBTA must look to alternatives that will create better air quality from the project; and (3) the layover in Scituate must be placed north of the Driftway.

Secretary Durand stated in his certificate that "the requirements of MEPA (Massachusetts Environmental Protection Act)...compel the conclusion that the preferred alternative should be Option C (North of the Driftway)." The Secretary further directs the MBTA to "work with the town to take all feasible measures to minimize and mitigate the impacts of the north of Driftway site, including traffic and noise, and incorporate these commitments into the final Section 61 Finding.

We are grateful that the Secretary has thoughtfully considered our position and has decided to protect the North River by requiring the layover to be constructed north of the Driftway. We are encouraged by reports that indicate Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan is glad to comply with the recommendations of Secretary Durand and he felt the certificate's requirements were fair and relatively easy to accomplish. We are further encouraged by reports that Scituate officials, opposed to the restoration project altogether, do not plan to include the layover site as part of their mitigation discussions.

We are hopeful that the layover will now be constructed north of the Driftway. We cannot rest until we see the plans and they are made part of the Section 61 report that will be submitted by the MBTA in the fall. We all must remain vigilant to make sure that the layover does not once again slide south of the Driftway.

We all can take pride in being part of the process that has protected our river. Secretary Durand prefaced his comments on the layover by stating that, "By far, the largest volume of comments received on the FEIR concern the siting of the layover facility, within the Greenbush area of Scituate." Girl Scouts, fishermen, neighbors, senior citizens, activists, government officials, lawyers, doctors, everyday people, non profit organizations, concerned people who live on the South Shore....what do they have in common? We all came together on an issue. We saw that putting a train station on the edge of the North River marsh was a mistake that would last for generations. We saw that the economic answer was not the right answer. We saw the alternative, which has it problems, but not nearly to the extent of a permanent scar on the only scenic protected river in Massachusetts.

Hundreds of letters were mailed and e-mailed into the Secretary. The focus of these letters did not stretch the truth, they did not exaggerate the facts, and they were to the point. The tremendous outpouring of opinion focused on these simple facts, the North River is a precious protected resource; there was a viable alternative to the proposal that would forever scar the North River. Secretary Durand listened to you. He recognized the obvious. He made the courageous decision from which local officials shied. Secretary Durand told the MBTA that the layover must be located north of the Driftway.

We all need to recognize that this was not an easy choice. North of the Driftway has its problems as well. Nevertheless, those concerns can be addressed. The North River is a treasure that we all enjoy.

To everyone who wrote a letter, made a call, sent an email, signed a petition...take pride that you made a difference. Fifty years from now, your grandchildren will not look out over the river and say, "who let that happen?" No one individual, no one event caused this result. The reason trains will not be parked on the edge of the North River is that you took the time, made the effort and let your voice be heard.

We all must remain vigilant to make sure that the layover does not once again slide south of the Driftway.

Bill Stanton is Executive Director of the North and South Rivers Watershed Association

Baseball and kids

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth, there was no such thing as Little League baseball, and 60 years later, I can say I'm grateful for it.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Oh, we played ball, all right, but it was on a vacant lot off Cedarcliff Road between the Nordahls house and the Teasdales residence. The bases were flat stones, and nine times out of ten the ball was wrapped in black tape. The first baseman and the catcher wore regulation fielders' gloves because we couldn't afford mitts.

The longest and loudest arguments involved close plays at first base and the calling of balls and strikes because we did it ourselves without interference from authority. Sometimes it was necessary to argue the score, too, because the game lasted all day and numbers tend to get a little vague after you reach 20 or 30.

Best of all, there were no adults around to mess things up. Like last week when the grownups were accused of falsifying a 14-year-old kid's birth records to make him eligible to compete against 12-year-olds in the Little League World Series, where they waved their bats futilely at his teenaged fastball as he pitched a no-hitter, striking out 16 of 18 hitters who faced him.

Dan Duquette may even have traded Pedro Martinez for Danny Almonte if he had been able to pass Pedro off as a 12-year-old.

May I venture the opinion that all this would never have happened if Danny had grown up playing baseball unsupervised in a T-shirt and dungarees on a vacant lot off Cedarcliff Road, rather than under the eyes of a coaching staff in full uniform on the carefully trimmed grass of a Little League diamond?

Baseball can be fun for the kids again if we observe two rules: Tell parents to stay away from their youngsters' games and let them enjoy themselves, and keep coaches and coach wannabes away from them until the kids have at least reached high school.

Only last summer, at least 20 men, most of them parents or uncles, charged out on a T-ball field in Miami and started a brawl over an umpire's decision while the four-and-five-year-old players watched in awe. For Pete's sake, that's T-ball, where the ball is hit off a tee instead of being pitched to the batter.

The summer before that, a man in Tamaqua, Pa., was convicted of assault by paying a 10-year-old Little League pitcher $2 to hit another player with a fastball.

James Michener, who won a Pulitzer Prize for his "Tales of the South Pacific," wrote another book, "Sports in America," in which he quotes the Hall of Fame pitcher Robin Roberts as saying this:

"I have four sons, and when my wife asked me about Little League, I told her, 'No way in the world.' Most professional athletes feel that way about kids under 14. If you try to make it serious before they're physically able to handle what they're doing, you run into all sorts of problems.

"Generally in the Little League, you're up against a good pitcher who throws like hell. What does the coach say? Get a walk. Isn't that a beautiful way to learn how to hit? For four years, you stand up there looking for a walk.

"Baseball at that age should be a softball thrown overhand where a boy can hit 15 times a game, with no walks and strikeouts. They should be running and sliding into bases. The score should be 42-38. That's what sports should be for kids that age.

"I'd certainly not let my boys enter a league where they'd be throwing curves at eight or nine years old, and I wouldn't want them all steamed up, headed for a pennant playoff at 11 or a World Series at 12. My father encouraged me to take it easy, and at 18, I had an arm prepared for the strain of real pitching."

14-year-old Danny Almonte may yet turn into a big league pitcher.

He may even make the Hall of Fame someday, but if he does, it'll be no thanks to the adults around him, the ones who are ruining baseball for the kids.

Tutorial program

Once again, Jim Benedict starts teaching the Internet Tutorial Program beginning Monday, Sept. 10, continuing to Thanksgiving.

The Internet Tutorial Program (ITP) is a teaching program designed for individuals who want to learn how to use computers to access the World Wide Web (www) on the internet.

The program is offered by libraries on their "in-house" computers. It is intended primarily for elderly persons who may not have acquired their own computer, but anyone may sign up for a class at any library that offers the program.

The ITP emphasis is on the word "tutorial". Teachers tutor each student by sitting at a computer with individual students going through each step. The student operates the computer and the instructor explains what to do and how to correct operational procedure. Sign-up sheets are available at the front desk of the library. Persons desiring to attend an ITP session are encouraged to sign up well in advance to ensure availability on specific dates. Call the library at 781-383-1348 for more information.

POLITICAL NOTES

Hedlund praised for voting record

Senate Minority Leader Brian P. Lees, R-East Longmeadow, commended the voting record of state Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, during the 2000-2001 formal legislative session. Hedlund maintained a 100-percent attendance and voting record during this period, as he has over the past several sessions.

"Sen. Hedlund is one of only a handful of senators who can claim such an accomplishment," Lees said. "I commend him for his obvious dedication and commitment to not only his constituents, but to all citizens of the commonwealth. I admire his conscientious efforts, and I am proud to serve with him as a member of the Republican Caucus in the Senate."

Hedlund is serving his fifth term representing the South Shore. He is a member of several legislative committees, including Commerce and Labor, Transportation, Government Regulations, Science and Technology, Criminal Justice, Post Audit and Oversight, and Energy. This term he was named to a leadership position in the Senate, Assistant Minority Whip. And earlier this year, Senate President Thomas Birmingham appointed him to represent the Massachusetts Legislature on the Conference of State Governments, Eastern Regional Transportation Committee. The committee is responsible for coordinating northeast regional transportation policy and funding issues with the federal government.

This month, Hedlund was also named to the Racing/Simulcasting Bill Conference Committee. The House and Senate passed separate versions of the bill, which makes a series of changes to horse and dog racing and simulcasting of races in the state. Committee members should begin conferencing the matter within the next few weeks.

Hingham native on senator's staff

The office of State Senator Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, announces the newest member of his legislative staff is Maurajane Healey. Healey, a graduate of Hingham High School, holds a bachelor of arts in political science from the University of Massachusetts at Boston, where she graduated summa cum laude.

While at UMass, Healey was actively involved in the theater program and participated in an internship with political analyst Jon Keller at Boston's WLVI-Channel 56. In October of 2000, Healey worked in conjunction with CNN for the first presidential debate at the University of Massachusetts at Boston.

Healey joins the senator's staff after working in the Trial Court of the Commonwealth in Plymouth as well as the Plymouth County Correctional Facility under the administration of former Sheriff Peter Forman.

Forman at former air base Sept. 13

Governor Swift's Chief of Staff Peter Forman will visit the South Weymouth Naval Air Station on Thursday, Sept. 13 at 9 a.m. to participate in a discussion of present and future infrastructure funding needs with state Senator Bob Hedlund, R-Weymouth, Tri-Town Development Corporation staff, and several other state and local officials.

Forman's visit was requested by Hedlund earlier in the year, during the beginning of the budget season, as earmarks were being discussed for a number of base funding initiatives. Also on the agenda will be a discussion of the proposed establishment of a permanent base for the state's Criminal Justice Training Council at the former air station. The corporation is seeking reimbursement for costs incurred by the corporation of $250,000, expended from its own reserves, to outfit barracks at the base for the Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Council and Massachusetts Police Corps so that they would be able to conduct training for police officers from throughout the state.

Hedlund met earlier this year with Secretary of Public Safety Jane Perlov to discuss consolidating the Criminal Justice Training Council activities at the Naval Air Station, and has been working with Rep. Ron Mariano to secure funding to facilitate the consolidation. The administration and training conducted by the training council is currently spread out over six locations throughout the state.

Hedlund met with Governor Swift last month to discuss the plan, and she assigned Forman to visit. The Executive Branch and Mass Highway oversees what highway funds may be released for infrastructure improvements, a major component of the base redevelopment plan. Previously Hedlund hosted a visit by Mass Highway Commissioner Matt Amorello to tour the base.

Earlier this month Senate President Thomas Birmingham toured the base with a group of state and local officials and heard their input concerning state funding.

Approval of a $500,000 unrestricted loan to the Tri-Town Development Corp. is still under consideration by the FY02 Budget Conference Committee.

The meeting will take place at the corporation's headquarters.

Garden club tree committee takes root

The group has been busy planting Elm trees around town to replace the ones lost decades ago to Dutch Elm Disease, and was also responsible for donating the trees at Constitution Park and the new Osgood School. Peck said the group also hopes to plant more at the Deer Hill and middle/high school once construction work there wraps up.

"We have trees scattered all over town, and we keep a record of what we have planted," she said.

Along with being a resource the town can look towards before planting anything, the group also hopes to catalogue the town's important trees, on both public and private property, and make the list available to the public. The catalogue will also contain a list of invasive trees to be avoided.

Peck's husband has been busy creating a surveyed map of the common's trees.

She said if the town is willing to remove four of the five maples — one tree is a memorial tree — the committee will donate replacement trees.

The group forwarded a list to selectmen with five replacement suggestions chosen for their rarity, size, durability and aesthetic value; Amur Maackia, Lacebark Elm, Goldenrain Tree, Red Horsechesnut, and Legacy Sugar Maple.

The selections were chosen by group member Ginny Norman, whom Peck said went through the horticulturist program at Radcliffe College, using a recommended list by Michael Dirr.

"We want to introduce more variety and more beautiful species to the town."

— Phyllis Peck, Community Garden Club

"He wrote the bible on trees and shrubs," said Peck, who has been involved with the garden club since she moved to town 16 years ago. "The trees are all tops on his lists, are attractive, most have a flower and aren't invasive."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he was looking forward to meeting with the group Tuesday at the selectmen's meeting.

"I'm very pleased, we like it when volunteers step forward to help the town," he said.

Flush with 'free cash'

service.

Buckley said in a report to Haddad that once that money is removed from the calculations, the remaining free cash balance is a "more normal" $858,810.

Haddad hopes to hold at least $400,000 to offset the next year's fiscal year 2003 operating budget, in order to avoid the need for a Proposition 2-1/2 override. Prop. 2-1/2 is the state law that caps the amount a town can raise its taxes in any given year to 2-1/2 percent without prior approval from the voters.

"We're not sure how much will be available for the special Town Meeting; we're still reviewing our capital budget numbers," said Haddad.

The town collected $557,028 more than the budgeted $405,785 in betterment revenue for the North Cohasset sewer project, mostly because many banks require homeowners to have paid the betterment in full, before lending any money for home refinancing or sales. Haddad said some residents also choose to pay their betterment off all at once instead of over a period of 20 years. Although excess revenue was collected last year, Haddad said that means not as much will be collected 15 years down the road. As a result, Haddad believes the money should be placed into the town's stabilization fund — its savings account — and invested to off-set long-term debt service.

Last year, the town collected $228,431 in interest from the money borrowed for the Osgood School construction project.

"Because of high transaction costs, we regularly do not borrow money for capital projects more than once a year. Therefore, at times we enjoy large surplus cash balances," Buckley said in his report. "Most, if not all communities, let these funds flow to surplus revenue and then spend them. In the case of debt exclusion override funded projects, we do not think that this is right. It is not fair to increase taxes to pay increased debt service costs and then not reduce taxes with any income that is generated."

Haddad and Buckley hope to also place the money into the stabilization fund and use it during the years before state reimbursement kicks in.

The state will pick up 60 percent of the project's cost, but reimbursement will not start until at least the 2004 fiscal year.

Buckley said the bulk of the free cash balance came from a surplus in local receipts. Aside from the sewer and school construction surpluses, an excess $311,760 was collected from excise taxes, $62,616 in penalties from back taxes, and $165,720 from town investments. Town departments returned $156,665 in unspent money — a relatively low number that Buckley chalked up to a tight operating budget.

Haddad and Buckley are also considering using the $1.6 million the town stands to collect from the MBTA for the purchase of the right-of-way to increase the town's credit rating for the $41 million Deer Hill and middle/high school projects.

Haddad said when Wall Street looks at the town to issue a credit rating, it looks at its reserve funds and ability to pay off its bills.

"The town has never had a problem paying its bills, the taxpayers have always stepped up to the plate when we've needed it," Haddad said.

By putting the money into the stabilization fund, Haddad hopes to knock off as much as two-tenths of a point on its interest rate.

"I want a AAA bond-rating," said Haddad. "And we'll do whatever it takes to get it."

The town currently has an "AA2" bond-rating, and the extra two-tenths of a point would save "a good chunk of change," according to Haddad.

Town wins $16K grant percent match will be split between the town and the CRC.

"The grant will enable the town to hire a preservation landscape architect for the purpose of looking at the existing conditions around the common – the green-space, the plantings and trees, the walkways, current parking around the common – and look at the entire common atmosphere," explained Dean Rizzo, executive director of the CRC, and the grant's chief author.

"Then we'll work with the community to develop a plan to further preserve and protect the common in the future."

Rizzo explained although the CRC is willing to pick up half of the town's match, the historic district commission will be calling the shots.

"They're going to be leading in its entirety the administering of the grant," he said. "We at the CRC wrote the application, got the materials together and submitted it on behalf of the town, and that's the end of our role."

DEM deputy commissioner Susan Frechette, who oversees the historic landscape preservation program, said the grants are "very competitive."

According to the award letter DEM received, 41 applications and chose just 20 for funding.

"These grants are designed to provide funding to help a municipality protect and preserve public landscapes that have an historic significance," she said.

Although she wasn't familiar with Cohasset's grant application specifically, she said the projects selected for grants have a cultural and historical significance, and have the long-term support and commitment from the town and community.

Rizzo attached letters from 16 civic groups in Cohasset in support of the grant, such as the town churches surrounding the common, the South Shore Arts Center, Planning Board, Historic Commission, Cohasset Historical Society, and the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission.

Clark said she is arranging a meeting of the historic district commission in order to discuss the grant. However, she said residents shouldn't expect any sort of drastic changes.

"It's very important that we make sure we stay within the parameters of the grant," she said. "Everything will be done in an appropriate way for the historic district."

Clark also said any proposed changes will find their way before the community before they are implemented.

Clark and Haddad plan to attend an informational meeting next week with the state to further discuss the grant and program restrictions.

The historic district commission will then look, with the help of the Massachusetts Historical Commission, for a qualified historic landscape architect.

Skippers open football season on Friday at Cardinal Spellman

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

One of the first things that will no doubt strike opponents of Cohasset High on the football field this fall is the low number of two-way players the team employs—a situation made particularly surprising given that CHS is, by far, the smallest school in the South Shore League.

Head coach Tony Rolfe presently has only three players penciled in to start on both offense and defense, a number far below the SSL average.

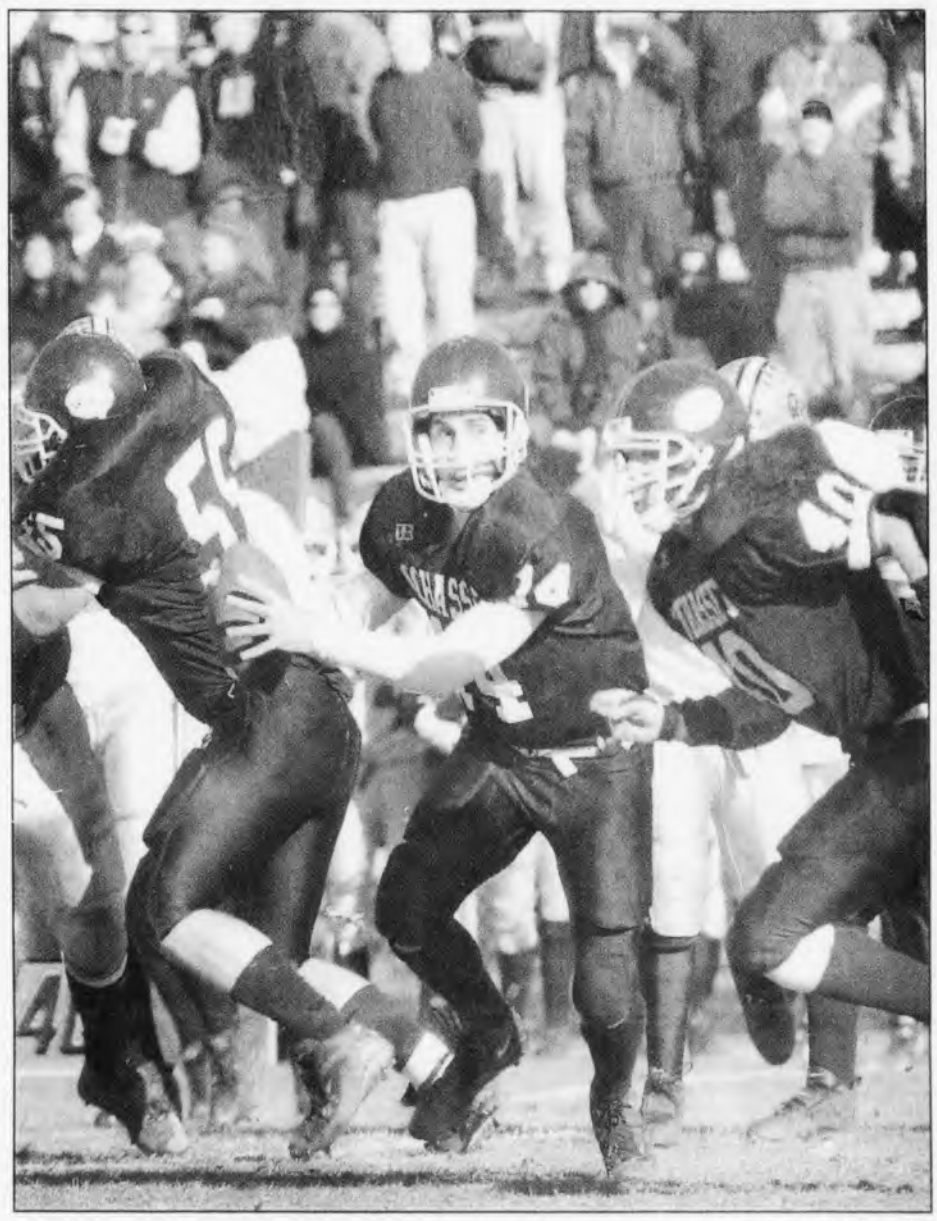
"We just feel we get more done in practice with players going one way and concentrating on one position," explained the fourth year head coach. "And it helps that we've had a couple of guys step up to give us that flexibility. Obviously, all things being equal, you like this because it gives you the chance to keep guys fresh."

The plan for now, just a few days before Cohasset opens the season in Brockton Friday night (at Cardinal Spellman, 7 p.m.), is to have Cosimo Cambi (offensive tackle, inside linebacker), Jason Brown (halfback, defensive back) and Liam Martin (wide out, defensive back) play on both sides of the ball. However, Rolfe noted that he'd try to get all three as much rest as possible.

On offense, Brown, a senior captain, should be the focal point, taking over for 1,200-yard rusher Brian Krupczak at tailback. The 5-foot-9-165 pound speedster (a star sprinter for the C.H.S. spring track team) showed good burst and surprising strength in scrimmages last week, and Rolfe sounds extremely optimistic about his prospects this season.

"Jason should give us everything we need at that position," stated Rolfe. "He gets away from people with nice moves, but doesn't shy away from contact, and he's got great acceleration."

This is the third year for Brown as a starter on offense, though the previous two had him lining up behind center at quarterback. He had a couple of 100 yard rushing games last season, but the challenge now will be to do it with everyone keying on him.



The signal-caller duties were expected to be assumed by junior Mike Snowdale, but a wrist injury has put him on the shelf for at least the opener. Sophomore Mike Dooley, who saw some time at backup QB behind Snowdale last fall with the JV squad, has, according to Rolfe, "really stepped up to do a nice job of directing the offense since (Snowdale) was hurt."

In two scrimmages played by the team last week—against South Shore Voke and Millis—Dooley moved the first team offense effectively, and even threw for three touchdowns.

Junior Braun Goodson (6'1-195) returns to start at fullback, and Rolfe is clearly thrilled with the improvement of his "big time lead blocker."

Blocking may well be a strength in general for the Skippers, with all six players up front having at least some

Let's do it again

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

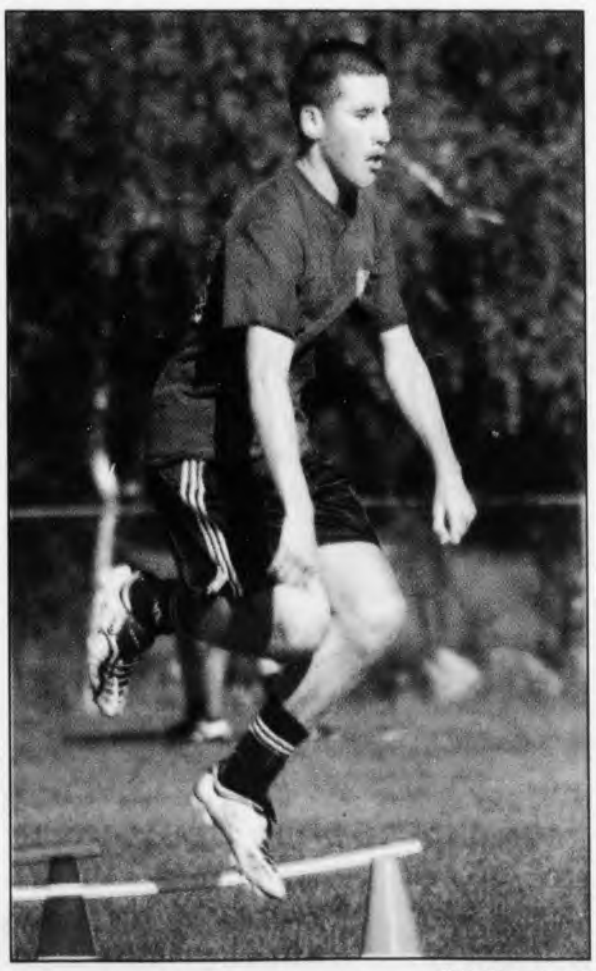
Over the past few seasons, the boys soccer program has risen to the status of one of the top programs Cohasset has to offer. This year does not look to be any different.

Last fall, the Skippers pulled off multiple playoff upsets after a 13 win season to advance to the sectional semifinals. That success, however, has apparently not made second year coach Dave Nigro feel anxious about repeating this kind of performance; in fact, it has led him to eye loftier goals.

"I think it is just something bigger to shoot for," reported the coach. "I will definitely be disappointed if they don't."

This Div. 3 squad has been very impressive against some upper level competition. Scrimmaging the Div. 2 Quincy team last week, Cohasset walloped their hosts 6-1. Their first pre-season loss came against Marshfield, the defending Eastern Mass champs and still one of the top Div. 1 programs in the state. The Skipprs hung tough with the Rams, however, before falling, 2-1.

Seniors Matt Bilodeau and Pete Maitland will take over the captain responsibilities from last year's leaders Erik Shea and Doug O'Brien.



Bilodeau, leading the way from center midfield, is a national level club soccer playing, with excellent defensive and scoring abilities. Maitland is a tremendous athlete with great speed at the outside defensive back position.

Along with Maitland, senior Steve Laney adds great speed and strength to the defense at the other outside back position. Junior Robert Hickey, still recovering from an ankle injury, has the very difficult job of succeeding former All-scholastic soccer player Shea at sweeper.

"It is going to be a little different," conceded Nigro, referring to the absence of top players from 2000 such as Shea, O'Brien, John Hertig, Heath Heinz and Nick Pestone. "But the other kids are another year older."

With Bilodeau leading the way, Nigro really hopes to focus on controlling the middle of the field this season. To that end, he has resorted to the unorthodox five midfielder configuration.

Lady Skippers hope to reload

Stung by graduation, coach Bostwick tries to build on the fly

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Losing five quality seniors to graduation is tough enough, but eleven?

The Cohasset girls field hockey team was hit harder by graduation last year than any other team in the area, losing eleven seniors, nine of them starters and three of them All-Stars. But coach Debbie Bostwick feels quite confident that she still has a very good team on her hands.

This year, five seniors will lead the way for the Lady Skippers, all of them have already proved themselves at the varsity level.

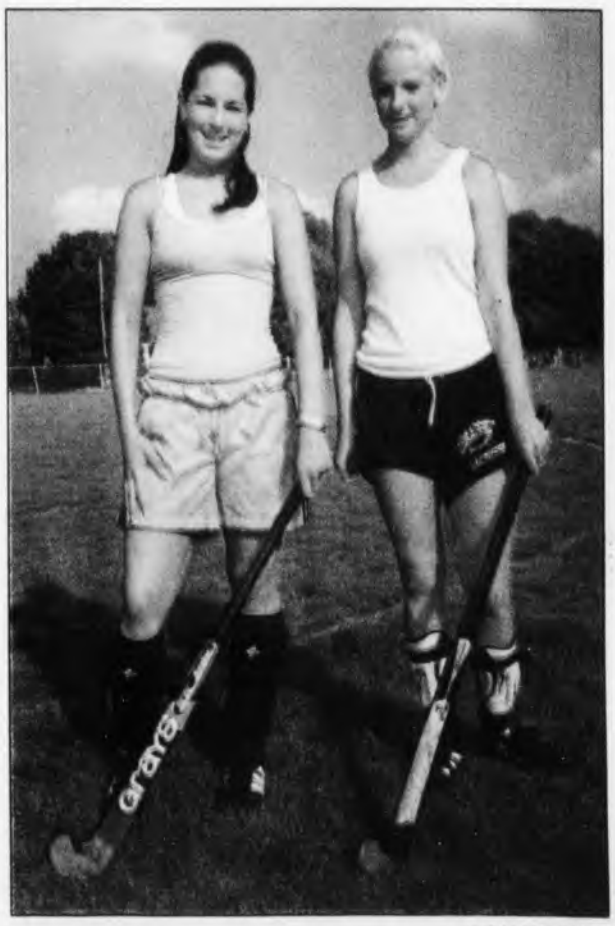
To start, senior co-captain Abbey Coakley will step into the left forward position, where she started last year. Coakley is one of only two returning starters, along with co-captain, junior Heather Peraino.

Peraino, second on the team in scoring last year as a sophomore, will lead the midfield attack at the center position. Peraino is one of the better all-around athletes on the team with quick hands and very solid drive.

At the right wing position, senior Allison Scott looks capable of putting up some impressive scoring numbers. As of right now, it looks like junior speedster Deanna Brown will take the remaining spot on the forward line with Scott and Coakley

Leading the defense are a trio of seniors, Katie Silva, Jackie Goines and Suzanne Lynner. Silva has one of the best drives on the team, often the one to take the penalty hits. Goines and Lynner make up a tandem that has played together for a few years now, already impressive at the varsity level.

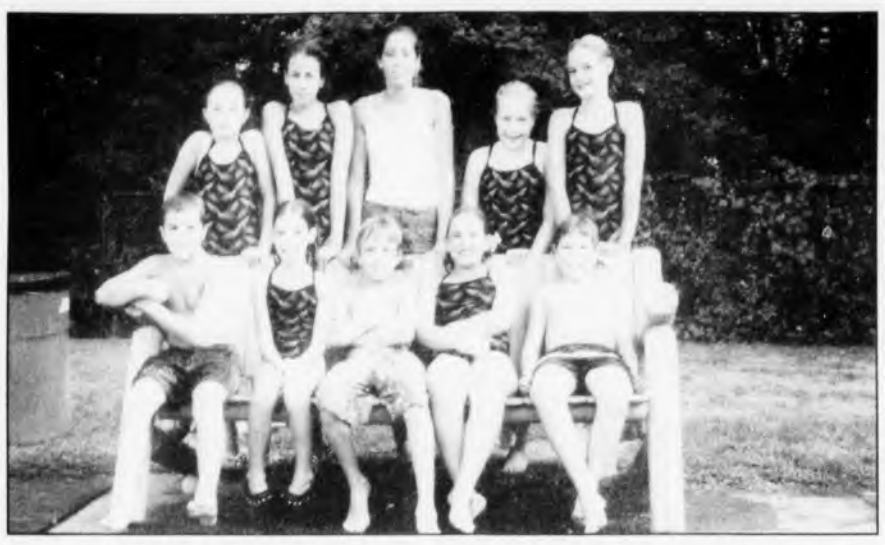
"Those two are going to have to keep the team morale going," reported Bostwick. "Those two are very vocal, trying to help the younger kids out."



Behind the defense, there will be three goalies battling out for the top spot. This has become a very difficult spot to fill, with last year's All-Star netminder Krysten Considine lost to graduation.

Junior Sera Genovese was last year's back-up varsity goalie, while junior Kristen Lavigne had a good season at the junior varsity level.

New to the netminding scene is sophomore Caitlyn Condon, who played midfield for the JV last year, but has since gone to field hockey camp to learn how to be a goalie.



Beyond the five seniors, there are 14 juniors for vying spots on the top team.

Cohasset dive team wraps up successful season

The Cohasset Diving Team had a fun-filled, successful summer season, highlighted by four diving meets at the Duxbury Yacht Club. Most of the 18 members of the 2001 Cohasset team performed three dives at each meet.

In addition to the four meets at Duxbury, coaches Amy Wojitastwski and her sister, Haley held a "red, white and blue" fun meet at the town pool, and also hosted an awards reception, in which many members of the team received honors for outstanding performances. Additionally, two members of this team were given "Coaches Awards." Michela Valente was recognized by the coaches for her positive attitude and efforts as a new member of the team, and Colby Smazel received praise for continuously trying to master new dives.

Several members of the Cohasset team scored high enough in the Duxbury meets to merit an invitation to compete in the regional championships, which were held at Wheaton College in Norton. Charlotte Sida, Carly Salerno, Wesley Medwid and Jay Salerno all participated in the championships and fared well.

prior starting experience.

Seniors Ari Martin (6-foot-1, 205 pounds) and Wil Prendergast (6-feet, 210 pounds) return as third year starters at center and guard, respectively.

At the tackle positions, both Cambi (6-foot-2, 200 pounds), a junior, and senior Brendan Goff (6-foot-1, 210 pounds) return to their starting positions. Both of these players have looked "very, very good in the scrimmages", said Rolfe.

"Brendan has really picked it up a notch this year, and Cosmo has improved too," lauded the coach. "I'm expecting a big year from both of them."

Sophomore Steven Davis is the least experienced of the crew, having started only a few games last season, but he comes from good stock. His brother Matt, a 2001 graduate, was a Skippers captain and South Shore League All-Star last year. In essence, Stephen (nicknamed "Baby Davis" at 5-foot-11, 190 pounds) now replaces his elder sibling.

Also returning to start at tight end is junior Tom Anderson (5-foot-10, 190 pounds), who should provide Dooley or Snowdale with a reliable target as well as consistent protection.

Of course, quality targets will probably be the least of the QBs worries, as Martin, sophomore Chris Bilodeau (last year's starters) and junior John Durkin will form a three player rotation at the wide out spots on which Rolfe sounds extremely high.

"Liam has got great experience and is a very sound receiver, and Chris has ice water in his veins," he said. "He can just flat out play, and now (Durkin) has really come along and given us another strong option there. There's not a lot of difference between those guys."

Rolfe confessed early last week that he was "a little concerned" about his defense. He is now happy to report, however, that his troops have made steady progress since then, something he said was particularly evident in the team's three scrimmages (against Hingham, Millis and South Shore Voke).

"We've had some people step up their level of play quite a bit, and the guys just seem to be getting more and more cohesive as a unit. We still need work on that side of the ball, but the signs are encouraging."

It has been expected since Day 1 that junior tackle Ben Lynner (6-feet, 200 pounds) would anchor the D-line at tackle, and he has certainly done nothing to change that prognostication in the pre-season, flashing the same combination of speed and strength that made him a standout on the gridiron last fall, as well as at power forward for the Skippers on the hardwood this past winter.

Lynner will be joined on the inside of the line by senior John Hussey (6-feet-1, 210 pounds). On the ends will be senior Tom Bilodeau (6-foot-2, 200 pounds, and no relation to Chris) and junior Mike Casey (5-feet-10, 180 pounds), who the coach calls "one of the most pleasant surprises" of the pre-season.

Captain Liam Martin (#81), seen here taking down a Hull ballcarrier last fall, is one of the few two-way players Coach Rolfe plans to emply this season.

"Things appear to be coming together pretty well up front," Rolfe said. "Casey has really come on to help solidify us. We're not biggest line, but I think we're strong enough to hold our own."

Paul Previte (5-foot-8, 175 pounds) and Cambi both saw extensive time last fall at linebacker, and will now be looked upon to fill much of the void created by the graduation of Ronan Buick, the team's leading tackler (by far) last season from his middle linebacker position.

At one of the outside spots, 5-foot-5-155 pound junior Chris McKenna has cemented his starting role, moving up from the defensive backfield—an area a player of his size (or, rather, the lack thereof) would seem to be better suited. Rolfe is quick to refute that notion, however.

"Once you see this kid [McKenna] play, you'll see that too," said Rolfe. "I think he shocks people with the way he flies around and hits people aggressively at his size. Honestly, I wouldn't trade him for a player twice his size right now."

Sophomore Tony Truglia was slated to start at the other outside linebacker spot, but an injury suffered by him in this past weekend's scrimmage has thrown that position back up for grabs. Rolfe said he expects the auditions for that job to be extremely heated over the final days of pre-season.

The defensive backfield should be an area of strength for the team with Martin and Brown returning to their starting roles. They will be joined back there by senior Eric Libby, a standout in hockey and lacrosse at CHS who decided to play football rather than soccer in his final year of high school and has managed to earn a starting job.

"Obviously, Eric is a real, real pleasant surprise," said Rolfe. "I don't know why he never played before now, but it's obvious he's got some natural ability. His addition, along with Jason and Liam, should give us a real solid unit back there."

Senior David Bouchard (5-foot-7, 160 pounds) will also likely see a good deal of time in the defensive backfield, likely shuffling in to give Martin or Brown a few much needed breaks.

As for predictions—bold or otherwise—coach Rolfe remains pretty reticent. He insists this is less a case of détente, however, than it is simply not knowing what the rest of the South Shore League will serve up.

"A lot of the top teams, like Carver and Norton, were hit hard by graduation, and we lost Hanover from our league, who looked like they were going to be pretty good this year," explained Rolfe. "Plus, right now, all of the coaches are more concerned with their own teams than the competition. It looks right now that the league could be pretty wide open."

And as for his own team.

"I feel pretty good about things right now," he said. "I'd like to say we'll be better than last year's team (1-5 in league, 5-5 overall), but you just don't know. I expect we'll be a lot better three weeks from now when we start our league schedule (Sept. 28, at home against Mashpee), but there's just no way for me to tell right now."

Let's do it again

"We want to win the ball in the midfield," he said. "And with the players we have, we are able to do that."

Though the midfield roster is not set in stone, it appears senior TimBaird and junior Curt Kahn, both left-footed, will split on either side of Bilodeau. The other two spots are up for grabs, but first year junior Evan Pestone and sophomore Jesse Brewer are both making strong bids.

Attacking will be returning snipers, Dan Kinchla, now a senior, and Greg O'Connell, a junior. Sophomore David Santiago may earn himself a spot on the varsity as the third forward.

Junior goalie Nick Spirito appears to be the only one in contention to take over the job held last year by Nick Pestone. Though he is normally a defensive back or midfielder, Brewer has seen time in net playing club soccer, and seems to be the choice for varsity back up.

In addition, there are 22 underclassmen, including 16 sophomores.

"I have 41 girls I am trying to make spots for," reported Bostwick, who plans to hold less than half that number, 18, on varsity.

"I only have a nucleus right now," she said.

Juniors Sarah Dennis, Kimmy Ulmer, Mary Deveney and Lindsay Grossman have all put in an impressive pre-season, according to their coach. However, Bostwick does not know which of her players will go to which team, as she firmly believes it is better for a player to play JV than to sit on the bench on varsity.

"I am not going to sit a junior when I know they can start sub-varsity," she explained.

On that same note, there are a number of very talented sophomores who may or may not swing depending on their potential playing time at junior varsity.

At the JV level, there will be a new coach, Danielle Shaughnessy, sister of familiar face Andi Shaughnessy, a three-time All-Star for Cohasset who graduated last year. Danielle played for Bostwick in her first year coaching high school level field hockey.

Bostwick intends to set her full roster by Friday, after capping off the pre-season with two jamboree length games against SSL foes Hull and Norwell.

The team opens the season against a very tough Silver Lake team this Friday at 5:00.

The "Swim With A Special Child" program will hold orientation and training sessions for all volunteers Sept. 11 and 18 at 9:30 AM at the Massachusetts Hospital School in Canton. Free child care is provided for training and for weekly classes beginning Sept. 25.

Swimmers of all ability levels are needed to swim one-on-one with students who have mental and/or physical disabilities. No special skills are required, and volunteers may swim for one, two or all three class sessions on Tuesdays from 9:15 to 11:45 AM.

SWASC welcomes non-swimmers to help with equipment and cheer leading on the deck, to serve coffee and refreshments, and to assist with child care for volunteers. Contact Mary Johnson at 617-472-0856 or June doherty at 781-335-3785 for more information.

"Swim With A Special Child," founded in 1971, is an all-volunteer program supported entirely through private contributions. Students come from public schools and mental health programs throughout the South Shore and neighboring towns.

Police chief asks for OT budget hike

Wants to add officer position to cut costs

By Rick Collins

Although Cohasset police have two injured officers back from the disabled list and will have another rookie fresh from the academy in its ranks later this month — the department is still behind the eight-ball when it comes to overtime costs, says Chief Brian Noonan.

As a result, Noonan has asked selectmen to include an article on the upcoming fall Special Town Meeting warrant that would add $60,000 to the department's overtime budget.

On July 1, the start of the current fiscal year, the department was down five officers. Sgt. David Pomarico, and officers Lisa Matos, Rick Yocum, and Thomas DaSilva were all out on disability. Officer Paul Laugelle left the department in June for undisclosed reasons.

"We were spending $5,000 to $7,000 a week on overtime," said Noonan. "We're still catching up from that time."

Pomarico and Matos recently returned from their leave, knocking the overtime costs down to approximately $4,000 a week. Brian Curran, the town's new officer, is scheduled to finish up his police academy training on Sept. 12 and assume a full-time shift by the end of the month — which will equate to a reduction of about another $1,000 a week in overtime on average.

Noonan said the situation could be helped if the town agreed to create a new police officer position.

But the damage has been done, said Noonan. The department has already spent $59,600 in overtime as of Aug. 26, and, according to the chief, is on pace to accrue $235,600 in costs for the entire fiscal year. Just $175,000 has been budgeted for police overtime.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he supports the request.

"They have some guys that are still out. They had the same problem last fiscal year, but now they don't need as much," he said.

Noonan said the situation could be helped if the town agreed to create a new police officer position. The department currently has 18 officers, including the four sergeants and two detectives, but Noonan said he'd like to eventually see that expanded to 20.

"It would just make overtime more manageable," he said.

Haddad said he is analyzing the pros and cons of hiring an additional police officer. He acknowledged that the town fire department's overtime problems were resolved a couple of years ago by hiring more firefighters.

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said he would wait until Tuesday's board meeting before making a decision as to whether to support the article.

"I've seen some memos, but I want to hear what Brian has to say on it personally," Koed said.

Noonan also asked that the department be reimbursed for the money it spent to install a new server for the fire and police department's computer system.

Last month, the police department spent $8,277.40 to build and install the new computer network that ties in the departments' different computers and workstations. The old system had become full and was in danger of crashing, and losing the departments' log records.

Selectmen have not yet formally set a date for the fall Special Town Meeting, but are looking at a date late in October.

Art center unites fine wine and fine art

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

There's nothing like welcoming the autumn season with a few glasses of elegantly-crafted wines and a some fine artwork.

You'll be able to enjoy both at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset this month. From Sept. 13-16, the art center will be displaying the work of renowned Nantucket painter Kerry Hallam. On Sept 14, a wine tasting party featuring vintage wines from France's Rhone Valley will be held from 6:30-9 p.m. on the premises of the art center in conjunction with Hallam's work.

Hallam will give a lecture on his work at 10 a.m. on Sept. 15 for those interested in knowing more about the artist or the Rhone Valley.

"The Rhone Valley is quite famous for its wines," said Monica McKenney, director of development at the art center. People will have the opportunity to taste these fine wines, and at the same time, view the artwork of an internationally known artist."

To add to the ambiance of the event, McKenney said the staff at the art center will be transforming the Bancroft Gallery into a virtual vineyard by building a large grape arbor in the center of the room as well as adding topiaries and twinkling lights.

While the event promises to be a tasteful, artful affair, it also will help support the center and its programs. McKenney said the proceeds will be donated to the Shirley F. Neer Teaching Chair for Children's Art, a foundation supporting children's programs at the art center. Neer was the center's board of directors president before she died in 1989.

"Her tireless efforts on behalf of the center will always be remembered as will her dedication to providing children with quality art education programs," McKenney said.

McKenney said the wine-tasting event will be educational with three distinguished Rhone Valley wine experts on hand to answer questions and give advice. Those people include Nantucket Wine Festival officials John Hayes, Denis Toner and Frank Neer (Shirley Neer's son) as well as David Turcan from the Gabriel Mefre Winery.

"We've selected a number of different whites and reds," Hayes said. "One of the main things we'll be speaking about at the event is the differences and subtleties in wines relative to different areas of the Rhone Valley."

Neer, who is vice-president of marketing for the popular annual Nantucket Wine Festival, also has a close connection to the art center because of his mother.

"My mom was very involved with the art center," he said, "and she just had a great love for art and education." Neer said he recently sat down with McKenney and art center executive director Sarah Hannan and planned the upcoming art/wine exhibition. When they talked about a possible artist who could display work during the event, both Neer and Hayes mentioned Hallam's name.

"He's been the featured artist at the Nantucket Wine Festival its last five years of existence," Neer said of Hallam. "He actually paints all the posters we use to advertise the event. We figured his art work would go hand in hand with what we were trying to do at the art center."

"Many of his paintings are of different vineyards, but he also does a lot of other kinds of work," Hayes added.

McKenney described Hallam as a "very multi-dimensional man." She said not only does he paint, but he is also a songwriter and a musician—she added Hallam also has a fantastic sense of humor.

"I've always had the idea that wine and the arts are intertwined," Hallam said. "And when I heard about this, it sounded great because I had painted the posters for the Nantucket Wine Festival."

Shirley F. Neer was the president of the South Shore Art Center Board of Directors when she died in 1989—much of her work there was dedicated to supporting children's art programs.

Hallam said about 50 of his works will be hanging in the Bancroft Gallery, all of them for sale. He said there will be a mix of oil paintings, acrylics, watercolors, and silk-screens.

"A day without wine is like a day without sunshine," Hallam added. "And a day without art is also like a day without sunshine."

Hallam has also had his share of fine wines—he's traveled with Hayes and Neer to France many times. He's also no stranger to displaying his art work, as he has been featured in art galleries all over the world. But he said one of the first shows he ever did in 1972 was held in none other than the Town of Cohasset.

"That show was held on the town green, and it was very enjoyable," he said. "This time, I'm back in Cohasset again, but the show at the art center will be a lot different than the one in 1972."

"We're really excited about this," McKenney said. "It's a very unique opportunity for people on the South Shore to see an artist and try some wines they normally wouldn't. I think it will be a very festive atmosphere."

Hayes said people will most certainly enjoy the artistic atmosphere during the wine tasting, but they will also enjoy learning about and simplifying the various tastes of different wines.

"A really good wine makes you silent," he said.

For more information about the art exhibition and wine tasting party, call the art center at (781) 383-2787. Admission to the wine tasting party costs $60 per person. Viewing Hallam's art at the center and attending his lecture on the premises Sept. 15 are free.

Above poster is one of the works artist Kerry Hallam painted for the Nantucket Wine Festival. Hallam has been the featured artist at the popular event for the past five years.

Summer of the shallop

Plimoth Plantation sails into past by recreating Pilgrim boat

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

The people at Plimoth Plantation are recreating another significant piece of American history, but it is not an antique home restoration or a statue in the likeness of one of the first Pilgrim settlers.

They are building a shallop.

We're not talking shell fish here. A shallop is a boat, and it was a vessel that the Pilgrims found essential in exploring their new home when they got here.

When the Pilgrims first arrived at Plymouth on the Mayflower, they found that the large ship could only get so close to the shore. They needed another kind of smaller boat in order to be able to explore and investigate the shore and beyond. The boats they used were called shallops, which typically range anywhere from 20-40 feet in length.

"They were often used for coastal travel, but they were also used for fishing. Primarily, shallops were always considered to be rowing and sailing vessels."

Peter Arenstam, department head at Plimoth Plantation's Marine Artisans department

"In the 17th century, shallops had a lot of uses," said Peter Arenstam, department head at Plimoth Plantation's Marine Artisans department. "They were often used for coastal travel, but they were also used for fishing. Primarily, shallops were always considered to be rowing and sailing vessels."

Arenstam said there are already two other shallops which exist at Plimoth Plantation, but the new one being built will represent its own piece of history. Arenstam said in 1626, a carpenter from Plymouth needed a way to get to Maine in order to go on a trading expedition, but he needed a large-sized shallop in order to take a long voyage like that.

In order to do that, the carpenter took a shallop, cut it in half, put a deck on it and redeveloped the vessel so that it was at least six feet longer than it had been in its original form. When it was done, the new shallop measured up to a length of about 33 feet. The carpenter took the voyage to Maine and it proved to be successful.

The carpenter's vessel is the one Arenstam and his staff are re-creating, and he noted the project was undertaken for a specific reason. The new shallop is being constructed for the Howland Society of Plymouth, a group of descendants of John Howland, a servant on the Mayflower.

"They approached us about it last year," Arenstam said. He added some of the Howland descendants would like to take the new shallop on a re-enacted trading voyage to Maine when the vessel is completed next summer.

Everything about this 21st century shallop will be the same as the one after which its modeled — even its construction. Arenstam said the crew building the vessel will use the same techniques as the Pilgrim boat builders did nearly 400 years ago.

"We're really sticking with the 17th-century naval architecture methods," he said, "and we're trying to follow the old building methods as well." Arenstam said tp keep the building process genuine, he and his artisans are doing a majority of the work by hand with 17th-century tools. He said surprisingly enough, a lot of the old tools are easier to use than he thought.

"Several of the people from the village artisans department (at Plimoth Plantation) are also working with us," Arenstam said, "and they're supplying the ability for us to do period work." Arenstam said they have all been working on the boat since the end of July.

When the new shallop is complete, Arenstam said it will most likely be able to maintain a speed of two knots when it is being rowed, and four knots when it is in sailing mode. The shallop will also be very sturdy being constructed out of white pine and white oak.

"We're doing this for the Howlands, but we're also doing this so we can learn more about our past," Arenstam said. "It's hard to get a real sense of how things were done back then through a book. In order to understand it, you have to do it, and that's what we're trying to do. And we've already learned a lot of things we never expected to learn."

For more information on the new shallop, call Plimoth Plantation at (508) 746-1622 or log onto www.plimoth.org. The public is more than welcome to observe the building process.

A shallop similar to the one pictured here is being built by historians at Plimoth Plantation. The new vessel will be ready to sail next summer.

4-minute chicken cutlets

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

I am appalled at the lengths some folks will go to get dinner on the table fast, gulping down frozen dinners, jarred spaghetti sauce, bad take-out Chinese food, and the ubiquitous Domino's pizza. I am no food snob – I love a burger as much as the next carnivore – but I am wedded to from-scratch home cooking for reasons of taste, health, and, well, philosophy. So, in order to compete with the likes of Wolfgang Puck's frozen pizzas, I set out with a near-impossible task. Could I create a recipe for a homemade chicken dinner that would take 20 minutes or less, including all preparation and cooking? The answer was a surprising and delicious yes!

My first thought was that skin and bones would have go in order to speed up cooking time. That left me with boneless, skinless cutlets. But chicken breasts can be quite thick, and they would never cook in just a few minutes. So after a bit of testing, I decided to slice them in half horizontally to make then thinner and quick-cooking. The next barrier to quick and easy cooking was the unevenness of the chicken breast. I found it necessary to quickly pound the thicker parts of the breast so that the sliced cutlets were an even 1/4-inch thick.

A hot saute pan was the likely cooking utensil because it is fast and easier to manage than a broiler or hot oven. But thin, naked cutlets would dry out quickly in a hot pan. My solution was to devise a simple coating for the cutlets to keep them juicy and add some textural contrast as well. The first choice was dried bread crumbs but they were a bit dull. A combination of grated Parmesan cheese and bread crumbs was better, providing both flavor and a crispy coating. I then tested egg whites, whole eggs, and then no eggs at all as a coating before adding the bread crumb/cheese mixture. The whites were the winner – the whole eggs made the coating too thick and heavy and without any egg, the cutlets were bland.

Because of the large amount of cheese, I found a nonstick skillet to be essential. Hot oil is crucial to developing a nice crispy crust. To determine whether the pan is hot enough is to add the olive oil, heat the pan over medium-high and wait until the oil starts to smoke. Now you know the pan is ready. The cooking time was fast, 3 to 4 minutes total, and I found that I could handle two cutlets at a time, enough for one person.

Now that I had a lightning-fast chicken recipe, I wanted to make a whole meal of it. A bed of arugula arranged on the plate with one sliced tomato worked nicely. These are then drizzled with extra-virgin olive oil and balsamic vinegar and sprinkled with fresh tarragon leaves. The hot chicken cutlets are then placed on top. Serve this quick dinner with a fresh baguette and a fruity wine and you have a quick from-scratch dinner, a whole lot better than any frozen pizza, even Wolfgang's!

4-MINUTE CHICKEN CUTLETS

A chicken breast is usually considered to include both halves which means two breasts. Use very fine store-bought bread crumbs for this recipe instead of fussing with homemade. You can skip the bed of greens if you like although peppery arugula adds a lot to this dish. The idea for this recipe was inspired by "New Food Fast," a wonderful cookbook by Donna Hays first published in 1999 in Australia.

4 split chicken breasts (2 complete breasts)
3 large egg whites
3/4 cups freshly grated Parmesan cheese
1/2 cup fine dried bread crumbs
6 tablespoons olive oil
3 cups arugula or tender greens of your choice (optional)
4 small to medium tomatoes
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
1 bunch tarragon (or basil)
Extra-virgin olive oil for drizzling
Balsamic vinegar for drizzling

1. Cut each whole breast in half (ending up with 4 pieces) and cut each individual breast in half horizontally. Pound each of the 8 pieces to an even 1/4-inch thickness. (Pounding in between 2 pieces of plastic wrap works best. Use the bottom of a small saucepan in a pinch.) In a small bowl, lightly whisk the egg whites with a fork. Combine the grated cheese and bread crumbs in a shallow dish or pie plate. Make a bed of 3/4 cup of the optional greens on each of 4 dinner plates. Slice the tomatoes and place on top of the greens. Drizzle with oil and vinegar and season with salt. Scatter the tarragon leaves (or basil) over the tomato.

2. Heat 4 tablespoons olive oil in a 10-inch nonstick skillet over medium-high heat until just starting to smoke. Meanwhile, season two pieces of chicken on both sides with salt and pepper. Dip each piece into the egg whites and then into the cheese/crumb mixture, pressing on the chicken to collect a thick coating on both sides. Place the chicken in the heated pan and cook 1 1/2 to 2 minutes on each side, or until deep golden brown. You can cut into a piece of chicken to check for doneness—it should be just cooked through and juicy. Remove to paper towels to drain. Repeat with the remaining pieces of chicken, adding the additional olive oil when necessary. On each of the 4 dinner plates arrange 2 pieces of hot chicken over the tomatoes and arugula. Serve immediately. Serves 4

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 6

Planetary action continues to rate high this morning. The Aries moon is active until 6:31 p.m., when it aligns with the planet Mars. It is best to launch major ventures, sign contracts, make big purchases before 1:05 p.m., when Venus forms a harmonious contact to Pluto. All creative endeavors also get the green light. Go for the gold. Influences turn around completely this evening. The moon enters Taurus at 8:18 p.m. A 90-degree alignment of the sun to Saturn urges you to drop worries and self-doubts. Stay upbeat and go with the flow.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 7

A lunar alignment to Neptune can make for a slow start to the morning. Allow extra time to get where you are going. People may be feeling sleepy and can be careless, late for appointments. This influence eases off by 10:00 a.m., however, and the remainder of the day holds high potential for productivity. Start new activities before 5:42 p.m., when the moon forms a harmonious contact to expansive Jupiter. An applying alignment of Venus/Saturn makes this a wonderful evening to spend quality time with close friends and family.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8

This is a great day for socializing, vacationing. If you are working, it may be difficult to focus on one job. The Taurus moon becomes inactive at 2:30 p.m., when it aligns with changeable Uranus. The planet Mars enters Capricorn at 1:51 p.m., traveling there until October 27. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Jupiter generates an upbeat mood. People will be friendly, agreeable, talkative. On the other hand, don't get carried away and go to extremes. Maintain a balance.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 9

This day rates high across the board. The moon enters Gemini at 5:41 a.m. Mercury, planetary ruler of Gemini, prepares to form harmonious contacts to Pluto and Saturn. That means that influences are prime for decision-making, contract-signing, launching new enterprises. Pull out all the stops. All communications are highlighted: send e-mails, faxes, write letters. Zero in on work projects that require mental precision, focus. You can cut through obstacles, see the reality of a situation and find solutions. On the other hand, if you prefer to play and party, this is a wonderful day for fun and games.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10

Above-average planetary activity continues. Read yesterday's advice. Mercury aligns with Pluto at 12:40 a.m. A lunar opposition to Pluto may generate emotional thunderstorms until 6:00 a.m. Take on a busy work schedule. You can be most productive. Handle a variety of jobs, errands. The green light for new starts remains on until 9:42 p.m., when the Gemini moon becomes inactive.

Captain Corelli's Mandolin (C+)

War is heck ... even on a captivatingly entrancing Greek island (Cephalonia), occupied during WW II by Italian and German troops, though nobody is fighting anybody, and the Italian troops idle away most days warbling opera arias and more popular ditties, while the most prominent German on view here, the polite and aw-shucks-y Captain Gunther Weber (David Morrissey), appears to have a not so secret desire to be an Italian and smoke cigarettes with the goombahs.

Derived from a successful novel by Louis de Bernieres, this seemingly endless melodrama tries to be travelogue, romantic triangle, tragic war story and celebration of the indomitable will of common folk to survive traumata with stamina, fetching peasant frocks, their accents intact.

Ah, accents. While European actors have a knack for sounding American — hear Irishman Colin Farrell in "American Outlaws" — most American actors, even the few who speak English comprehensibly, are lost ambling in the thickets of foreign accents. Nicolas Cage, as the title character, causes one to flash back to Chico Marx, though Penelope Cruz, who hasn't yet truly mastered English, can do only so much trying to transform her Spanish accent into Italian-accented English. She's Pelagia, the local beauty engaged to smoldering, illiterate fisherman Mandras (Christian Bale, Welsh-born, long since at ease in any accent), daughter to the wise old doctor (John Hurt, another Brit who can do any accent without embarrassment).

Do you need a guide-book here? Promised to Mandras but entranced by Corelli, Pelagia reluctantly but then fully throws herself into amour with the man of the mandolin, which is not OK with Mandras' formidable mamma (Irene Papas, the Greek cinema's one-person chorus of woeful tidings and vengeful recourses). But worse is yet to come, as Italy surrenders to the Allies while Germany plods on, involving for our idyllic island an awkward transfer of Italian weaponry to the snarling Germans, which may mean bad tidings for the Italians, thus inciting a rebellion. Mandras returns, still smoldering, now bearded and energized with the fervor of a committed partisan, spoiling for a fight on his home turf as he proved himself a man for all reasons and in all seasons when fighting on the mainland somewhere, never mind where.

So much going on, including ghastly behavior by the Germans — poor, civilized Captain Weber is mortified, but what's a sensitive soldier like Gunther to do in such circumstances? — and a parting that should propel our hands deep into our pockets to ferret out our Kleenex somehow doesn't.

Much of what's wrong with this excellently photographed movie is that even the most tear-jerk-worthy bits don't jerk our tears, and even the finest characters don't engage our sympathies. Hey, if Pelagia wanted to arrange a menage a trois with Mandras and Corelli, we wouldn't be scandalized. It all seems so by-the-book, and despite the lusty and the tender singing, and the peek-a-boo carnality, and the sexy bathing in the sea scene, and other rosy vignettes ripe for framing, the film is inert. The good guys won the war, by the way. Whew.

Uneasy calm after catastrophe

The flag on Cohasset Common stands at half mast in memoriam to the countless thousands who lost their lives in Tuesday's horrific terrorist attack on the United States of America.

Town comes to grips with tragedy

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Just 300 miles away from the most horrific tragedy in American history, tranquil Cohasset painted a picture much different from the one being shown on TV screens across the nation.

It was a classic New England late-summer day in town. Leaves gently drifted to the ground in the breeze. The sun was bright, but not too warm. Cohasset Harbor was quiet and still.

Deer Hill and Osgood School students did what all kids to at recess: they played ball games, ran around after each other, skipped rope — all oblivious to the tragic scene playing out in New York City, Washington D.C., and the woods of Pennsylvania.

Tuesday, Sept. 11, 2001, has become the 21st century's Day of Infamy, with thousands undoubtedly killed, and millions of lives changed.

The shock waves from the terrorist strikes sent tremors throughout the nation, including the South Shore, where residents were frantically trying to locate family members and friends who may have been at either location.

"All I can say is the world as we knew it has changed today."
— Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan

It may be days before the impact on Cohasset is fully recognized, but a pall seemed to descend on the town just hours after the disaster.

The town was as quiet as a Sunday morning. Few cars were on the road. No one was on the harbor. Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan said the phone had barely rung all day.

"It's been extremely quiet, almost eerily so," he said.

After gawking all morning at the small TV set in the Selectmen's Office at Cohasset Town Hall, Town Manager Mark Haddad obtained permission to send town employees home at noon.

"I've talked to Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed and Selectman Michael Sullivan, and they felt the best thing was for town employees to go home and spend time with their families and children," he said.

All town meetings were canceled Tuesday night.

Haddad watched some of the proceedings alongside Noonan, Building Inspector Robert Egan, and some departmental secretaries.

"I'm in an absolute state of shock," Haddad said, staring at replays of a hijacked passenger jet from Boston roaring into one of the World Trade towers. "I can't believe this is happening."

"All I can say is the world as we knew it has changed today," said Noonan. "It will be very different in the future."

Although town hall closed, the town's schools remained open, allowing most Cohasset schoolchildren one more day of innocence.

"I just don't see any need to close the schools," Superintendent Edward Malvey said.

He said it would have been tough to get the buses back together, plus too many students would have been released to empty homes. "We're trying to just have a normal school day," said Malvey.

Tomorrow could be very different, he added.

As students find out about relatives, friends, or acquaintances injured or killed in one of the many tragedies, Malvey said the school will have grievance counselors ready.

"We're going to be putting together an assistance team," he said.

Middle/high school principal Dr. Michael Jones said a group of administrators and faculty would meet after school to set up a support system, and discuss how to handle any questions students may have.

Jones said he had made a very general announcement regarding the plane crashes over the school's public address system, but had not relayed many of the terrible details.

"We don't want to create a culture of hysteria," he said, as dozens of students busily ate lunch a few feet away. "We want to make this as normal of a day as possible."

However, he couldn't deny that some students had become more aware of the extent of damage, and word was starting to spread through the halls.

Schools deal with asbestos anxiety

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

School opening at Deer Hill School was clouded with unnecessary parental fears over asbestos, officials say.

In what could be described as mild hysteria over worries about air quality and dust, school committee and building committee members were inundated with calls and approached by concerned parents since school opened last Wednesday.

"People hear asbestos and the natural reaction is fear. But there is nothing to fear here."
— Robert Spofford, school building committee

The vast majority of asbestos floor tiles were removed from the grade 4-6 elementary school over the summer. However, tiles under bookcases, which are bolted to the wall in the library and a couple of other locations, were not removed to save labor costs, building committee chairman Robert Spofford said.

Floor tiles, which commonly contain asbestos, are non-friable materials — meaning their asbestos fibers are tightly bound and can't be easily crumbled and released into the air. Airborne asbestos dust can be hazardous to health if inhaled.

Spofford said the cut edge of the tiles, which protrude about one-eighth of an inch from underneath the bookcases, present no danger.

"The bookcases are bolted to the wall and are not movable," Spofford told the school committee last week. "To move them would entail unbolting them from the

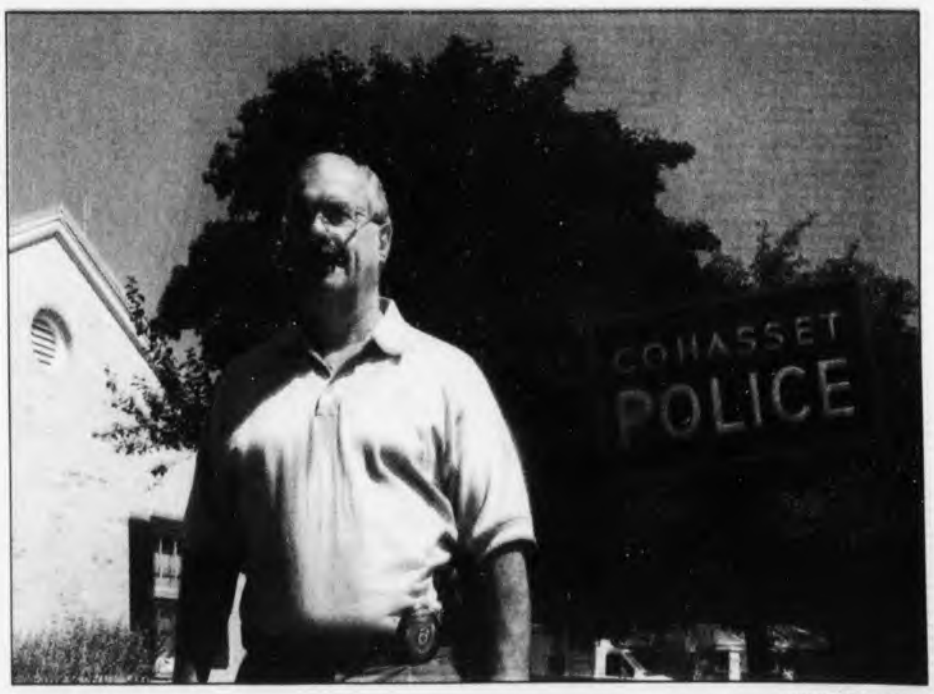
Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan announced this week that he intends to retire at the end of the year.

"It's just time to give someone else a chance," said Noonan, who has served as chief since 1993.



Noonan said he has told Town Manager Mark Haddad of his intentions and agreed to stay on board through the budgeting cycle for the next fiscal year. He said he could see himself stepping down after the first of the year.

Haddad said he tried to convince Noonan to change his mind, but was unable to.

"I've worked with Brian for four years now, and he has been a hard-working, dedicated chief of police," said Haddad. "I'm sad to see him go, but happy for him."

The vast majority of asbestos floor tiles were removed from the grade 4-6 elementary school over the summer. However, tiles under bookcases, which are bolted to the wall in the library and a couple of other locations, were not removed to save labor costs, building committee chairman Robert Spofford said.

Floor tiles, which commonly contain asbestos, are non-friable materials — meaning their asbestos fibers are tightly bound and can't be easily crumbled and released into the air. Airborne asbestos dust can be hazardous to health if inhaled.

Spofford said the cut edge of the tiles, which protrude about one-eighth of an inch from underneath the bookcases, present no danger.

"The bookcases are bolted to the wall and are not movable," Spofford told the school committee last week. "To move them would entail unbolting them from the

Chief Noonan to call it a day

Haddad to appoint search team

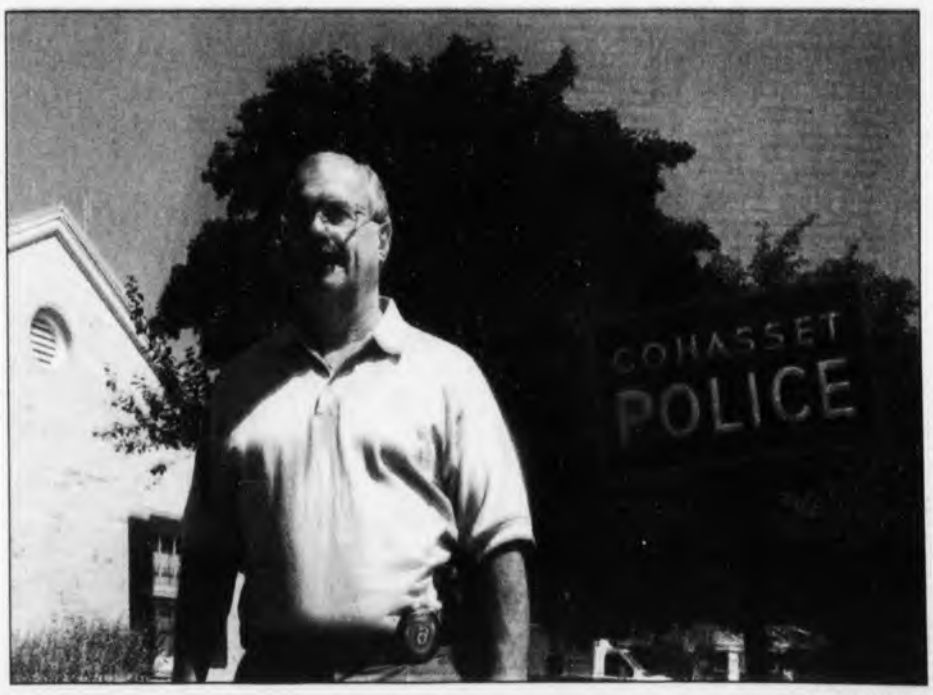
Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan announced this week that he intends to retire at the end of the year.

"It's just time to give someone else a chance," said Noonan, who has served as chief since 1993.



Noonan said he has told Town Manager Mark Haddad of his intentions and agreed to stay on board through the budgeting cycle for the next fiscal year. He said he could see himself stepping down after the first of the year.

Haddad said he tried to convince Noonan to change his mind, but was unable to.

"I've worked with Brian for four years now, and he has been a hard-working, dedicated chief of police," said Haddad. "I'm sad to see him go, but happy for him."

Trustees push library expansion

Want to proceed even without grant in hand

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library Board of Trustees hopes to proceed with the new library construction project this fall, despite not yet receiving a needed state grant.

But the library will need approval from the upcoming fall Special Town Meeting to do so.

When the library construction project was approved at the Annual Town Meeting in 2000, it did so with three conditions before $2.9 million could be borrowed for the project:

- Library trustees would have to raise $700,000
- The Paul Pratt Memorial Library building on South Main Street would be sold
- The library would receive a $1.5 million Massachusetts Library Construction Grant from the state.

According to trustees president Patience Towle, the Library Building Fund has raised $1.1 million in private donations, $400,000 more than what was required.

However, the Cohasset grant application did not receive immediate funding. It was placed first on the waiting list and will be the first project to receive funds when made available by the state legislature.

"It means we are going to get that money," Towle told selectmen last month.

But rather than wait up to a year to receive the funding, library trustees hope to strike a deal with the town to start the project this fall, borrow the money, and cover all interest charges for the first year. The library would also cover $9,180 in bid processing fees.

Towle said in a later interview the trustees are concerned if the project is delayed any further, the cost of the project would rise again. The original cost to renovate the former Osgood School into the new town library was $2.9 million, but has since risen $400,000, which was covered by an extended capital fund drive by the trustees.

"The project won't get any cheaper," she said. "The interest costs for the project are substantially lower than any rise in construction costs that we might see, even with a softening of the construction project market."

Selectmen unanimously agreed to sponsor a Special Town Meeting article that would amend the original article and allow the town to borrow the money before receiving the grant. Town Manager Mark Haddad said the change would still mean that the project will be done at no cost to Cohasset taxpayers.

Towle said bids for the project will be opened on Oct. 3, and trustees will be able to give Special Town Meeting voters a hard cost figure.

"If successful, we would get a contractor under agreement in November, and go right in to the construction and demolition phase this winter," she said.

Towle said the basic library plan has not changed since it was first presented to Town Meeting more a year ago, except some tweaking to the exterior landscaping.

"Other than that we haven't changed a hair on its head," she said.

According to a statement sent to Haddad and town finance director Michael Buckley, the Library Building Fund has $575,775.66 in its account as of Aug. 14, with additional committed donations arriving over the next three years.

The proposed Discovery Center — an interactive museum for children between the ages of two and eight — still is in the works to fill the 1929 wing of the old school.

Linda Shropshire, a spokesperson for Leah Taylor Roy, who proposed the center, said once the library project gets back on track, so will the center's fundraising efforts. She said Roy hopes to raise approximately $1 million for the center in enough time to start construction in conjunction with the library project.

Option lost for changed 'use' in zoning district

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

While the local jury may still be out regarding how the loss of flexibility to the Cohasset's zoning bylaws will affect town planning efforts, the state Attorney General announced it has approved the change in the town's bylaws that prohibits the Zoning Board of Appeals from granting use variances.

A "use variance" is needed to build in a zoning area where that use is not specifically allowed under town zoning bylaws, explained ZBA chairman Woody Chittick. For example, if a person wanted to build a housing complex in an area zoned light industrial, the developer would need a use variance.

Chittick said the bylaw change "takes away the option of granting a variance," even though the town rarely received requests for them.

"If there was a semi-related use that just seemed to make sense in a given district, but wasn't specifically permitted, the board would have been able to exercise their discretion," he said. "[The change] takes away the zoning board's ability to interpret the definition of a permitted use."

The bylaw was an amended version of a Town Meeting article that looked to ban use variances for landfills. The article was amended on the floor of Town Meeting by Planning Board member Robert Sturdy to ban all use variances, and received the two-thirds vote needed to adopt the bylaw change.

However, the bylaw change soon came under fire as some charged that not all of its implications were disclosed at the time of the vote.

The Senior Housing Committee went as far to write a letter to the Attorney General's Office urging it to void the bylaw change.

"There was a lot of heavy blinking that day," former committee chairman James Lagrotteria said in May. "There was a lot of zoning articles, and nobody paid any attention to it. It was proposed by the Planning Board, and everybody said, 'Oh, OK.'"

The committee was particularly concerned that it would prohibit residents from creating accessory dwellings, or in-law apartments, and would hinder the search for developable land for senior housing.

Chittick said converting a single-family house into a two-family house would only be allowed in zoning areas where conversions are permitted.

He also wondered if Town Meeting voters fully appreciated the impact of eliminating use variances.

According to Chittick, a use variance and a special permit is not the same thing. Some non-permitted uses are allowed with a special permit, which is "a lot less onerous to receive," said Chittick.

Last appeal for photos

This is a final appeal for photos for consideration for volume 3 of Cohasset town history. Author Jackie Dormitzer has almost finished her account of the last 50 years and the town history committee needs photos of town events, everyday life, town landmarks here and gone etc.

Project's sewer issue could cause a stink

3A apartment developer to look at options

By Mary Ford and Rick Collins
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cohasset is currently lacking a large, upscale apartment complex. But that could change if a Virginia-based developer is able to solve wastewater and septic issues at the 62-acre site off Route 3A.

"It's an up-market area that is attractive to us," said Michael J. Roberts of AvalonBay Communities, Inc. about the town. "We think it's a great piece of real estate."

AvalonBay, which has offices in Quincy, plans to submit a proposal to build a 254-unit residential development that will include some affordable housing on the former Webb-Norfolk Conveyor property, a large tract of industrial land off Route 3A across from Atlantic Bagel. Avalon will seek a comprehensive permit for the $43-million project under the state's "Anti-snob Zoning Act" that renders many of the town's zoning regulations inapplicable in exchange for a portion of the units set aside for affordable housing.

But a comprehensive permit that allows higher density housing than normally would be permitted under local zoning won't solve the biggest hurdle for Avalon, which is sewers, Roberts said.

"We deal with water and traffic issues at all our sites – but the biggest issue on this one is sewer," he said. "We've spent a lot of time talking about it."

He said ideally Avalon would like to connect to the Cohasset sewer system but realizes that may not be possible because the system, which was recently expanded, may be at capacity. Other options include installing about two miles of sewer main to connect to Hull, which has available capacity in its municipal sewer system, or installing an on-site treatment plant.

"Technology is such that we could make that an option," Roberts said about an on-site system. He explained the soils aren't great but by using state-of-the-art technology, wastewater could be treated before being discharged.

"We think it's a great piece of real estate."

— Michael J. Roberts of AvalonBay Communities, Inc.

The proposal — which is geared to both ends of the demographic spectrum from young professionals to "empty-nesters" — is to construct 23, two-to-three story wood-frame buildings with one-, two- and three-bedroom units. The complex would also include an outdoor heated pool, spa, exercise facility and clubhouse. Seventy percent of the affordable units would be given local preference. The affordable apartments would look the same as the market-rate units and be dispersed throughout the complex. Rents would range from $1,200-$2,100 for the market-rate units and about $700-$1,000 for the affordable ones, he said. The project would raise an estimated $400,000 a year in property taxes and is unlikely to attract families with children, who could flood Cohasset schools.

"Most people with children won't spend that much on apartments," Roberts said.

The buildings would be at least 350 feet from Route 3A, a state highway, and 40 percent of the land would remain as open space, Roberts said.

A possible incentive to Cohasset for the project is the way the state counts affordable housing units in rental projects. Under Mass. General Laws Chapter 40B — which sets a 10 percent goal of affordable housing in each community — all 254 units would count although only up to one-quarter would actually be affordable. Cohasset currently has about 3 percent or 76 units of affordable housing – the addition of 254 would put the town over the 10 percent threshold making it no longer vulnerable to comprehensive permits. Some towns like Hingham, which has only 2.4 percent affordable housing, are currently inundated with high-density comprehensive permit projects.

Even with the streamlined zoning process, Avalon plans to work with the town, Roberts said.

"We listen, we change, we try to get a project everyone is comfortable with," he said. "We like to operate on the theory there could be a chance for repeat business, although there really isn't an option for that in Cohasset.

"We see the project as a beneficial partnership."

Once Avalon receives preliminary approval from the Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency, a state subsidy program, — expected in the next 30-60 days — it will file an application for a comprehensive permit with the Zoning Board of Appeals. Avalon has the 62-acre property under agreement with the sale pending on obtaining the necessary approvals. According to the assessors' office, the site has an assessed value of $1,832,700.

Barry eyes transfer site off Route 3A

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset businessman Paul Barry hopes to expand his trash operation by opening a 299-ton, per-day construction waste transfer facility off Route 3A.

Barry, who owns Graham Waste Services and the closed Cohasset Heights Limited, told the Board of Health that no household trash would be brought in, and all materials would eventually be transported off the site.

He said he is currently working with engineers on plans for the facility, and has not yet filed for a site assignment with the state Department of Environmental Protection, nor with any local boards.

"There's a disposal crisis in Massachusetts," he said. "This is an opportunity to cut down on the mountains of trash."

Barry said up to 30 trucks a day would haul construction waste such as wood, cement, and bricks to an enclosed building adjacent to his closed landfill. He said workers would separate the rubble, find any reusable materials, and then ship it off site — in some cases out of state.

Barry was recently denied a permit to operate a transfer facility in Abington off Route 18. He said this facility would be similar to the Abington proposal, but much smaller and without household trash.

"For some reason there's a stigma when it comes to private transfer stations," Barry told the Board of Health. "If you notice, a lot of public transfer stations, including our own, is in a residential neighborhood. For some reason that's an acceptable process, but they're also dealing with household trash."

Board of Health Chairman Stephen Bobo said this week that he has asked town counsel about what jurisdiction the board has in the matter.

"If the jurisdiction is such that the board has to respond to Barry's initiative, we'll probably have something to say at the next meeting," he said.

The health risks are different than the ones posed by Cohasset Heights specifically, he new proposal would be a transfer station and not a landfill.

Former diplomat urges response

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Though no longer in public service, Beach Street resident Lincoln Bloomfield still has lots to say on Tuesday's national catastrophe in New York City and Washington D.C.

Bloomfield worked in the State Department under John Foster Dulles, as well as helped set up the United Nations in 1946. He became Director of Global Issues for the National Security Council under President Jimmy Carter in the late 1970's, shortly after the Camp David Peace Accords between Israel and Egypt.

"If Pearl Harbor had been done in living color, on American television, with every detail visible, it probably would have had the same effect," he said of Tuesday's unexpected attack captured and broadcast live on television.

The root of the attack, apparently carried out by Islamic extremists, stems from the decades-old Arab-Israeli conflict, which is now as hot as ever.

"The Mid-East is a can of works, and has been for years," Bloomfield said Tuesday. "I've been marinated in that problem set too long, as a mid-level diplomat, as a lecturer and a student of conflict."

Unfortunately, for religious fanatics intent on carrying out their destructive message, death isn't a deterrent.

"The people there want to die, in the name of, what seems to me, to be a very flawed God," said Bloomfield. "It results in asymmetrical warfare."

The world was shown just how helpless a $300 billion military budget can be rendered Tuesday, when four groups of terrorists hijacked American planes and turned them into guided missiles.

"We had 12 carrier groups, and they had four suicide bombers," he said. "That is what it is, David versus Goliath, with the weapons on both sides totally different."

The David character, is in this case thought to be linked to Osama bin Laden, who has already shown what he can do. Bloomfield argued. Bin Laden claimed partial responsibility to the two U.S. Embassy bombings in 1998, and last summer's bombing of the U.S.S. Cole in a Yemen port.

"I just hope they can get a return address for these people," he said.

Bloomfield acknowledged he was throwing out diplomacy for a more hawk-ish stance.

"Normally, I'm a chicken on other things," he said. "But I would dearly love to see these terrorist groups of hard-line fanatics wiped out. They can't be converted to moderation, and their grievances are expressed in a way that damages thousands of innocent people."

Bloomfield may no longer have a voice in American policy making, but his namesake does.

Lincoln Bloomfield Jr., a member of the Cohasset High School Class of 1970, was tabbed this winter to be President George W. Bush's Assistant Secretary of State for Political/Military Affairs.

Bloomfield said his son was on a three-country tour of southern South America with Secretary of State Colin Powell when the attacks occurred. He said Powell had been recalled, but was not sure whether his son also had made his way back to the United States.

EXCITING NEWS!

A Cohasset resident is being acknowledged by Gov. Swift's office. The governor's office is hosting a Cabinet Day, today [Sept/ 13], which will include a complete itinerary of visits throughout the South Shore. Included in this day is a site visit to Dependable Cleaners' corporate office in Quincy. That's where Jack King, director of the Massachusetts Division of Employment and Training will visit Cohasset's Christa Hagearty, who is president of Dependable. Mr. King will acknowledge the company's ongoing training program, titled "Training for our Future," which is paid for by the state Workforce Training Fund. Dependable applied for the funds in an effort to increase retention, which will in tern increase the number of potential assistant managers available to the company.

That is all for this week. I cannot find a suitable quote for how I am feeling right now with all the horrible events that we as a country are dealing with.

Instead, I am asking each one of us to stop and pray, think and remember all those who have lost their lives, the life of a loved one and to continue to remember those injured and affected in this week's tragic events. Make sure to hug and let all of those around you know how special and important they are, life changes in a matter of seconds.

New town employee could give geese the boot

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The new town employee doesn't need any benefits. He doesn't even talk back. Better yet, he loves his job.

He's Zinger, a year-old border collie, burdened with the duty of ridding neighborhoods around Lily Pond of "foul" packs of geese.

According to Lily Pond Lane residents, their neighborhood has been terrorized for years by flocks of up to 50 geese loitering and messing on their lawns.

"One goose drops half a pound of mess a day, now multiply that by 50," said Judy St. Peter, who has lived on the private way tucked along the edge of the pond for six years.

Every spring the birds come back to the pond and become unwanted visitors.

"They start nesting and won't leave," she said. "Kids can't go out and ride their bikes."

St. Peter said she and her neighbors have tried all sorts of different types of methods to shoo away the geese — wire fencing, decoys — but have been unsuccessful.

"Geese are very resilient, they become desensitized easily," she said.

The geese molt, covering lawns in feathers — that is if the lawn hasn't already been killed by the pounds of droppings every day.

"They're very messy," said St. Peter, a mother of two. "Kids can track it into the house on their shoes. If they're playing football, they can pick some up from the ball."

An Internet search of goose-shooing methods turned up an increasingly popular solution in municipalities across the country – border collies.

The medium-sized smart and agile dogs, usually used for sheep herding, have become a humane way of dealing with increasing geese problems.

Brian Mulkernan, course superintendent at Widow's Walk Golf Course in Scituate, said the course used to employ a border collie with great success.

"They are amazing, they work really well," he said.

St. Peter, a dog lover, said she heard the testimony and bought a third dog for her family, the aforementioned Zinger.

Zinger, who lives on Lily Pond Lane, could be the solution to a fowl problem.

"It's unbelievable how big of a business [border collies for goose-shooing] has become," she said.

St. Peter explained that a border collie instinctively tries to round up other animals, circling their flanks, staring them in the eyes.

"However, geese see the dog as a predator, because it stalks down low to the ground like a coyote," she explained.

As she explained basic behavioral patterns of border collies, Zinger was running around the other two family pets, a pug named Xena, and a pure-bred boxer named Roxy.

"He'll circle them," St. Peter said. "They're really intelligent dogs."

> "He'll circle them. They're really intelligent dogs."
> — Judy St. Peter, Lily Pond Lane

Last week, before the town Board of Health, St. Peter proposed using Zinger to chase away the geese from Lily Pond, including the town water treatment plant. Because of their persistence, St. Peter said it would take multiple trips per day to chase the geese off for good.

"You really need to harass them," she told the board.

Board of Health Chairman Stephen Bobo liked the idea of Zinger joining the town payroll.

"There have been complaints from people essentially saying the ground was green from the droppings," he said this week. "That apparently is what happened on Lily Pond Lane, and there's concern about a number of places in town with both geese and swans."

Bobo said even though goose droppings tend to be more benign than other animals', in terms of containing pathogens harmful to humans, it will affect fecal coliform levels.

St. John said green algae tends to form around the edges of Lily Pond from the droppings.

But obviously, Bobo said, "kids shouldn't play in it."

However, that's exactly what kids were doing up at Cohasset High School.

"We had a real problem at Lillard Field," Athletic Director Ron Ford said about geese congregating on the old football practice field behind the high school. "Goose feces doesn't harm you, but it's pretty annoying to practice on a field filled with goose droppings...Up at Milliken and Alumni Field they were crapping everywhere."

The Board of Health voted to take St. John up on her offer, and allocated $200 for some preliminary visits. Bobo said the board would also discuss with Town Manager Mark Haddad the possibility of asking for some additional funds at the upcoming fall Special Town Meeting.

"We want to clear up the problem, but we don't want to spend a lot of money," he said.

Ford was all for letting Zinger run loose in the town fields.

"I would love to see a dog up here," he said. "The only things that scare [the geese] off is a dog. Someone can run at them, but they won't fly off."

St. John said border collies actually have no interest in catching the geese.

"They just want to herd," she explained.

St. John also said border collies tend to be shy, so children shouldn't run up to Zinger and expect to be covered in wet kisses.

"He's a work dog, not a lap dog for petting," she said. "If his concentration wanders off, he can get confused."

St. John said Zinger is still receiving some training twice a week, but should be ready come March and April to give the town's geese the boot.

Uneasy calm after catastrophe

selor Ed Leonard stood in a hallway echoing Jones' comments about not "creating any hysteria," but local impacts soon took over.

As a female student walked by, he paused and told her that her mother had called and her family in New York was safe.

Leonard said some parents have called, and some students have made calls home.

"If something did happen to an uncle, their mom should tell them that, not me," he said.

Neither Osgood School Principal Janet Sheehan, nor Deer Hill School Principal Paul Callahan told their students, also choosing to let parents break the news to their children.

The parking lot shared by Hancock Paint and Atlantic Bagel Company off Route 3A was empty — strange for 1 p.m. on a nice afternoon.

Robin Bradshaw, manager of Atlantic Bagel, had earlier picked up her two daughters from school to spend the day with her in the store.

"If anything had happened, I wanted us to be together," she said.

"It's been quiet, we usually do a busy lunch hour, with teachers and high school students," she said. "I think everyone's glued to the television."

It was a bit busier inside the Red Lion Inn, where more than a dozen people sat inside the old, wooden bar watching a spokesman from the Afghanistan political group Taliban deny any involvement in the kamikaze pilots.

Owner Gerd Ordelheide said people have been inside watching all morning long.

"Everything came to a standstill, the construction workers stopped working and watched," he said.

He said what happened was bigger than the tragedy at Pearl Harbor.

"This is just an unbelievable situation...it's and act of war," he said.

By 2 p.m., as the first casualties were being confirmed, most of the town — Cohasset Village, Cohasset Harbor, Sohier Street, North Main Street, Pond Street, Route 3A — remained silent. But the doors to some of the town's churches swung open, allowing residents to begin their search for some answers.

St. Stephen's Church pastor, the Rev. Cliff Cutler, said he had seen several residents trying to find solace within the church's walls.

"Something like this really takes a person's faith to a deeper level," he said. "We generally think the innocent shouldn't have to suffer at the hands of terrorists as they have.

"We can't give up on non-violence. I know there's Palestinians, Muslims and Christians committed to non-violence," he continued. "And we can't give up efforts to resolve disputes that we face in the world today."

Second Congregational Church minister, the Rev. Gary Ritts, said, "At this time, it's best to just be together with people and pray for the victims."

Ritts announced that St. Anthony's Church will host an ecumenical service Sunday 6 p.m., and all town residents are welcome.

Emotions run high on South Shore

By Mariner staff

Tuesday morning was an emotional roller coaster for Bernice Brown. The assistant town clerk sat in the office at Scituate Town Hall, listening to a small black radio that relayed every last detail of the terrorist attack on the World Trade Center.

But as she listened and more news came in, her concerns for those involved turned to tears for a loved one as reports of another attack, this one on Washington's Pentagon, came over the airwaves.

Brown's son, William R. Brown, a U.S. Marine Corps Major works on the A Ring in the Pentagon — the section of the building damaged most heavily in Tuesday's attack.

The 39-year-old Scituate native, however, wasn't in the building when the attack took place. Brown said her son had an insurance issue he needed to clear up with an adjuster, so he wasn't planning to be at work first thing in the morning as he usually is. As he rode the METRO to the Pentagon later in the morning, he witnessed first-hand the devastation that had taken place. He immediately phoned his family, including Brown at Scituate Town Hall, and his wife, who is a teacher in the Washington D.C. area.

Brown's voice cracked as she reflected on the moments between hearing the news of the attack and the news of her son's safety. As she paused, she covered her mouth with her hand, eyes starting to tear, and softly spoke of her son, thanking God that he was alright.

"He is safe and fine," Brown said of her son. "But now he's very anxious and concerned."

Brown said her son described this terrorist attack as "very well planned," and said he was worried now about the rest of his coworkers.

"His biggest concern is for the other people involved," Brown said. "He doesn't know if his colleagues survived."

Claudia Wait, of Duxbury, has been an American Airlines flight attendant for more than 20 years. She has had some scares and even some emergency landings, but never has she been as terrified as she was Tuesday.

Wait flew the ill-fated American Airlines flight 11 regularly. It was her route, Boston to Los Angeles. But this particular week, Wait had taken a vacation and was home in her kitchen as the jet crashed into the skyscraper.

"She answered the phone when I called," Wait's daughter-in-law Deirdre said. "She was just so upset because she normally flies that route. Nothing as awful as this has ever happened."

Wait told Deirdre she will most likely know some of the crew members aboard the flight, but was unable to find out any information yet.

Deirdre, who works in the Community Newspaper Company out of Marshfield, was one of many in the office with ties to the New York attack.

Mariner reporter Shanley Stern's mother and sister were stuck in the city, unable to escape the chaos as all bridges and highways were closed off. It was impossible for Stern to know if her family members were unhurt as cell phones and home phones were disconnected.

Toward the afternoon, calls started to come through and for the Mariner Newsroom employees, their families were among the lucky. The reporter's mother and sister were trapped in hours of deadlock traffic, but escaped the city unscathed.

"We were right near the World Trade Center 20 minutes before it happened," one relative said. "We were going to eat breakfast down there, but there was too much traffic so we turned around."

Just as Wait was waiting to hear from her peers, Cathy Conley, an editor at the Mariner, had just heard from her son, who sometimes worked out of the World Trade Center. He was on his way to work when the first explosion hit the building. He turned around and went home as soon as the events started unraveling. At the same time, Conley's second son was waiting to board a plane headed for New York City to attend a wedding at the World Trade Center scheduled for noon. His plane was rerouted and landed in Orlando.

The attack in New York concerned Hanover High School principal Peter Badalament because his brother-in-law works at the World Trade Center. Badalament later received word his in-law was safe.

Hanover Middle School teacher Alice Boyle was especially worried about the attacks against the airliners because her relatives were due to fly to Los Angeles yesterday afternoon. Her worries were eased when FAA officials suspended all flights across the U.S. "They won't be going anywhere for awhile," said Boyle.

"It's a terrible assault on what this country stands for," said State Rep. Robert J. Nyman, D-Hanover. "It's an assault on our democracy, our government and upon innocent people."

When The Mariner contacted officials from Norwell High School, there was too much happening at the time for people to even talk about it.

Hanover school principals canceled outdoor recess at all three elementary schools shortly after receiving news reports about the attacks. "Our doors are locked and our children are not going outside," said Cedar School principal Scott Borstel.

Kingston Intermediate School principal Bill O'Brien also took precautionary measures and secured the school.

"Basically, when we first got the news, I contacted the superintendent and the Kingston Police Department as well as securing all the doors at the school and arranged for indoor recesses and physical education classes," O'Brien said all TVs at the school were left off, as to not alarm the 700 children at the Intermediate School and the other 500 students at the neighboring elementary school.

"The phone was just ringing off the hook yesterday with calls from concerned parents," O'Brien added. "We gave parents the option of picking their kids up if they chose."

O'Brien said as of press time yesterday, he had not spoken to any of the students about the incidents as of yet, and he was not quite so sure he was going to.

"We are basically trying to keep a lid on things for the moment," O'Brien said. "We're just trying to be professional, keep the students safe and eliminate parents' anxiety. In terms of what I'll say to the kids toward the end of the day, I'm not so sure yet. I'll have to talk to the administrators to see if everyone thinks it's a good idea."

A question of whether to continue voting in the Democratic primary in the 9th District had Braintree' town clerk baffled. Just as town officials were watching acting Gov. Jane Swift encourage voters to go to the polls, vowing that no terrorist attack would prevent democracy in action, Braintree Town Clerk Joseph Powers learned via his cell phone that Secretary of State William Galvin's office planned to go to court seeking an injunction to stop the election.

Even as of late afternoon Tuesday, officials were still not certain what to do about the election. But they were certain of one thing: the day's events unfolding had an impact on the election to select a Democratic candidate to square off against the Republican vying for the seat of the late congressman, Joseph Moakley.

The Braintree Board of Selectmen held a swiftly arranged meeting with local officials at 12:30 Tuesday which concluded with a moment of silence in memory of the victims. A state of emergency was not declared, but Selectmen Chairman James Casey encouraged "a heightened level of awareness."

Evening activities at town hall, including a meeting of the Housing Authority, were cancelled, with the exception of voting in the Ninth Congressional District primary election. Police said every marked police unit was put out into the field.

Schools deal with asbestos anxiety

wall, moving them and putting them back."

He said the effort would have been redundant because next summer the interior of the school is going to be demolished anyway. Deer Hill renovations are part of the ongoing $40 million school project that includes expanding and refurbishing the middle-high school.

In a telephone interview Simon Tempest, school project manager, said the asbestos in the remaining tiles is not a problem. However to put an fears to rest, the school department did ask its consultant, Stoneham-based Universal Engineering Corp., which is experienced with asbestos removal, to review the situation.

"The consultant, who is familiar with the process, says it is not an issue," Tempest said. "They came down to review and said there is absolutely no problem.

"We knew it was not a problem and confirmed it again with the specialist we have."

However, plans may include covering the edge of the exposed tiles with tape to add to the comfort level. Tempest explained even though the tiles were cut, they would have had to be ground up for the asbestos to become airborne.

"The only reason we would cover the tiles is for cosmetic reasons," Spofford said Tuesday. "We could put duct tape over them, but there is no need." Spofford said the building committee, scheduled to meet last night after the Mariner went to press, would decide that issue.

Spofford said removal of asbestos from the school was monitored by the consultant and the state. He said Deer Hill and middle-high school passed air quality tests following asbestos removal with "flying colors" and the data is available at Supt. Edward Malvey's office.

"People hear asbestos and the natural reaction is fear," Spofford said. "But there is nothing to fear here."

Tempest, the project manager, thinks confusion arose due to the presence of excess dust, which is common at construction sites and likely came from the cement filler put on the exposed floor after the tiles were removed. Efforts to keep up with cleaning the dust are ongoing, he said.

At last week's meeting, school committee member Mark DeGiacomo said he told one caller that dust at the school might continue to be an issue.

"People have to understand we are trying to mitigate this as much as possible, but is going to be dust on occasion," he said.

Health agent warns schools about dust

During his annual pre-start of school walk through of the town's three schools, town health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said he was concerned with the amount of dust present, particularly in the Deer Hill School.

The Deer Hill is part of the $41 million school construction project that also includes work at the middle/high school.

In his report of his Aug. 28 visit, Godzik reported that "many rooms still needed cleaning. The window curtains have large accumulations of dust."

But, Godzik said, since his inspection, the schools have "taken care of most of the serious problems."

He said that the main problem was in the Deer Hill School's library, which he called "very, very dusty" in an interview this week.

Godzik also reported many exhaust systems in the bathrooms both at the Deer Hill and middle/high school not working, as neither were some of the schools' main ventilation systems. Also, Godzik found problems in both schools' cafeterias that needed immediate attention.

At last week's school committee meeting, Superintendent Edward Malvey said he felt the schools had sufficiently addressed the concerns raised by Godzik.

"Stop by and look," he told the school committee. "We are staying on top of it, trying to stay ahead of the curve."

However he added that anyone with concerns should bring them to the attention of the school department.

Malvey also said rumors that there is asbestos dust in the air left from this summer's asbestos removal is not true. Any increase in dust particles are from the construction projects.

The school committee said they have been contacted by some parents.

"I told the caller there is going to be dust and we will do the best we can," said committee member Mark DeGiacomo. "We will try to mitigate as much as we can, but there is going to be dust on occasion."

"Just like in your home," added chairman Stephanie Noble.
